"Because they restored my spirit in a time of trial, I have dedicated myself to restoring the spirit of America," he said. "And so today, tempered by adversity, seasoned by experience, mindful of the world as it is — yet confident it can be better — I have come home to Kansas with a grateful heart to declare that I am a candidate for the presidency of the United States."

Dole said during most of this century, power and wealth have flowed from grassroots Americans to the federal government, which exploded to meet the twin crises of economic depression and global war.

STUDENT ELECTIONS '95

Elections begin today

HOW & WHERE

You can vote from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. today and Wednesday on the send floor of the K-State Union. Veterinary medicine students can vote from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Trotter Hall. Don't forget to take your K-State ID with you.

Candidates miss deadline, meetings

MARY EMERSON
Collegian

A formal grievance has been filed against a student body presidential and vice presidential team.

Jeremy Blair, junior in marketing, and Doug Bassett, sophomore in public relations, failed to turn in their expenditure report on the deadline on Friday. They are in violation of Campaign Regulations Bill 94/95/53.

"They said that they had stuff they were still paying for and didn't know the totals, but I don't think that is a good excuse," Chad Schneiter, Elections Committee chairman, said.

Blair said their banner had been ripped and needed to be repaired, but they did not know how much it would cost.

"We weren't neglecting the rules; we felt it was an extraordinary circumstance," Blair said.

The expenditure report was given to the Elections Committee Monday morning. It met the committee's guidelines.

Fifteen other candidates also failed to turn in expenditure reports, and 10 have missed mandatory meetings.

Schneiter said he did not feel many other violations had been committed, and the ones that were committed were minor.

"I've had people come up and tell me a poster has been hung

Committee seeks accuracy with Scan-TRON

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Bring your No. 2 lead pencil and your student ID to the polls.

This year, students will be voting in much the same way they take big lecture-class tests — by Scan-TRON.

"We just wanted to advance our election process," Chad Schneiter, Elections Committee chairman, said.

Students will have to present their student IDs in order to vote, he said.

Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities and services, said the slots in the ballot boxes have been made larger so ballots do not need to be folded.

"We'd rather people didn't fold their ballots," she said.

Folding the ballots will slow down the scanning process because folded ballots might get caught in the machinery, she said.

The ballots are 8-1/2 by 11 inch sheets printed like teacher-evaluation forms. Numbers appear next to the candidates' names, which correspond to the numbers next to the circles.

"Just fill in the circles," Schneiter said.

Computing and Network Services has set up a program to count the ballots from the election today and Wednesday, he said. The ballots will be taken to CNS about every two hours so the computers can keep up with traffic at the polls.

"After we have all the tabs on the Scan-TRON, we have three judges who will tabulate the hard copies," Schneiter said.

In order for the election to be valid, the margin of error in the ballots cannot exceed 10 percent, he said.

Nolfi said the ballots were all keyed in by hand under the old system. With thousands of ballots to key in, there was a lot of room for human error, she said.

Nolfi said she thought the results would be more accurate than in the past.

"The Election Committee spent all their time worrying about that rather than the election as a whole," he said.

Schneiter said he thought this year's election was running smoothly because the committee had all year to prepare for and think about the election.

"CNS has said by 10 p.m. that night, without any problems, they will be done with their stuff," he said.

Once CNS has counted all the ballots electronically, the judges will have to count all the hard copies of the ballots again.

Students form parties to present platforms, save money

LISA ELLIOTT

Six political parties registered with the Elections Committee by the Friday deadline.

Chad Schneiter, Elections Committee chairman, said six was the most political parties in a student election in several years.

"A lot of them have platforms," Schneiter said.

Others formed their parties to save money, he said.

Steve Weatherman, incumbent business senator and junior in finance, is a member of the 3-Keg Party.

"I think the members have different reasons for starting the party," he said.

Weatherman said he joined the party because the three candidates could pool their resources and split up the work load.

"Our platform, since we are all business majors, is primarily to make sure the interests of business students are met," Weatherman said.

The party name was suggested to Weatherman by an engineering senator candidate, and he asked if he could use it.

"I guess the keg could stand for an explosion of leadership," Weatherman said.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ YALE STUDENT EXPELLED FOR LYING ON FINANCIAL AID APPLICATIONS

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A Yale University student was expelled one month before graduation and charged with accepting more than $10,000 in financial aid under false pretenses for allegedly lying on his admission application.

University police arrested Lon Grammer on Thursday in his campus room. He was released on his own recognizance for arraignment last Tuesday.

"He applied for different grants to pay for his college tuition, and we were able to find that he was not who he portrayed himself to be," said James Perrotti, assistant chief of campus police. "There were a number of fraudulent records."

Grammer's lawyer, Norman A. Pattis, Yale officials and university police wouldn't detail the allegedly false information on the application.

But Yale spokesman Gary Fryer said Monday that the records Grammer is accused of falsifying were critical to his admission.

The 25-year-old from Brentwood, Calif., was charged with first-degree larceny, which means theft of at least $10,000. Campus police wouldn't give the exact amount of financial aid involved.

"If the university believes that's larceny, they should consult someone in their law school, perhaps a first-year law student," Grammer's lawyer said.

The student had no comment.

Tuition, room and board cost about $26,000 a year at Yale.

Grammer was studying political science. He started at Yale in 1993 after transferring from Cuesta College in San Luis Obispo, Calif. He was supposed to graduate in May.

"I'm just outraged by how they treated this kid," Pattis said. "What is truly shocking is that the university summarily expelled a student who was on the eve of graduation."

Grammer was arrested days after Harvard withdrew an offer of admission to a 19-year-old woman after learning she pleaded no contest in the 1989 slaying of her mother.

▶ LANDMARK RULING COULD CAUSE OPEN SEASON ON GUN MAKERS

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The maker of the guns used in a 1993 law office massacre can be sued for the carnage their products caused, a judge ruled Monday.

A ruling on whether the manufacturers of the magazines and ammunition used in those weapons may also be included in the lawsuits won't be decided until summer, however.

Gian Luigi Ferri used three guns, including two semi-automatic weapons, to shoot up the law offices of Pettit & Martin on July 1, 1993. Ferri, 55, killed eight people and wounded six others before taking his own life.

Superior Court Judge James Warren ruled that gun manufacturer Navegar Inc. might be liable for the carnage under legal theories of strict liability and negligence. Strict liability and negligence allow damages for any harm caused by a dangerous product.

However, courts have not previously held makers of assault weapons liable for damages resulting from criminal misuse of their products.

Warren based his ruling on the fact the TEC-DC-9 that Ferri used was a slightly modified version of one that California banned in 1989.

He reasoned that when Navegar introduced the gun into the general market it could have foreseen that it might eventually make its way into California and be used for criminal purposes.

Navegar attorney Ernest Getto said the semi-automatics were made legally in Florida and sold to Ferri in Nevada — both states without bans on assault weapons at the time.

"We did nothing unlawful in California," Getto said.

Sarah Brady's Center to Prevent Handgun Violence filed eight lawsuits in May on behalf of survivors and victims' families. The lawsuits maintain the manufacturers negligently made and sold products that would be used to kill or injure innocent people in a violent criminal act.

■ The story on Earth Day activities on page 1 of Monday's Collegian incorrectly reported that UPC planned two weeks of activities for Earth Day. Actually, Students for Sustainability planned the events. UPC sponsored some of the events.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

K-STATE POLICE

SUNDAY, APRIL 9

At 7:40 p.m., Dan Lee advised of water on the floor of the men's room in the Farrell Library basement. A troubleshooter was advised.

MONDAY, APRIL 10

At 12:36 a.m., Peter Schmidt, 452 Goodnow Hall, reported an unknown subject had broken a side window of his car in Lot B-3. Loss was less than $300.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

SUNDAY, APRIL 9

At 2:55 a.m., Kenneth Holiwell, 1327 Houston St., Apt. 3, called and said that about 30 minutes earlier, an unknown subject had called and said she had been battered and possibly had a broken arm. She gave the address as 3804 Butternut Drive. An officer checked, and no such address existed on Butternut Lane or Butterfield Road. An officer met with Holiwell, who said later he believed it was a prank.

At 4:09 a.m., a car was stopped because a male was riding on the hood. An officer advised it was a verbal domestic dispute. The male received a ticket for unlawful riding.

At 2:20 p.m., a theft was reported at 821 Osage St. The victims were Rod Evert, 821 Osage St., and Terry Wordekemper, Beatrice, Neb. Both had fishing equipment stolen. Evert's loss was $350. Wordekemper's loss was $160.

At 5:53 p.m., a vehicular-injury accident was reported at North Manhattan Avenue and Petticoat Lane involving Jeffrey Kreuser, Independence; Stephen Trenhol, 1854 Claflin Road, Apt. 5; and Kevin Ness, 423 Goodnow Hall. Trenhol reported neck and back injuries. Ness filed a major-damage report.

MONDAY, APRIL 10

At 1:56 a.m., Samara Fyke, 615 Leavenworth St., Apt. 5, was arrested on a Louisville, Ky., warrant for failure to appear and for possession of a controlled substance. He was confined on $25,000 bond.

Author, TV guest to visit K-State

Kansas City native has diverse background

CARRIE LININ
Collegian

A columnist for the national magazine the Nation who has appeared on "The Late Show with David Letterman" and "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson" will speak for the next Convocation Lecture.

Calvin Trillin, author of the weekly column "Uncivil Liberties," will speak at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

"The title of the speech is 'Calvin Trillin's America,'" Virginia Moxley, chair of the University Convocation Committee, said.

Moxley said the title of the speech is vague so that Trillin can cover whatever he wants during his speech.

She said Trillin is known for both his columns and his books about food.

"He is coming to K-State to deliver the Convocation Lecture and to promote his new book, 'The Tummy Trilogy.' It's three of his books collected into one volume," Leigh Anne Nicholson, campus news coordinator, said.

Nicholson said Trillin's favorite topics are Kansas City's barbecue and its people.

Putting people and food together is one of Trillin's greatest gifts, she said.

"He is very good at describing the personalities that are behind restaurants," Nicholson said.

Trillin's writing style has a large following at K-State, Moxley said.

"Calvin Trillin has a lot of fans at K-State, people who follow his writings. He has a very Midwestern approach to things but at the same time has a very cosmopolitan view of the world," she said.

Trillin has published pieces in the New Yorker magazine for more than 30 years.

He was born and raised in Kansas City, Mo., and has never stopped writing about his hometown.

His work also has included two comic novels, a collection of short stories and a weekly offering of comic verse for the Nation.

Trillin travels widely as a speaker.

For 14 years, he was a regular guest on "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson," and he continues to appear regularly on Letterman's show.

Trillin has also performed on Broadway for the American Place Theater in New York.

"He has had one-man shows on Broadway, and they have both been sellouts," Nicholson said.

"Anyone who has a chance to come hear him should. I am confident that it will be interesting, insightful, and it will be funny," Moxley said.

Students interested in writing are encouraged to attend.

"I'm hoping that a lot of students in journalism that are interested in the craft of writing will go see him because I think he really is a great writer and will motivate you to write. He can show you that it can be done," Nicholson said.

Manager on leave for stress

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

City manager Jim Pearson is on a self-requested, two-week administrative leave of absence until April 18 because of work-related stress.

"I'm just tired. I've been working fairly steadily for three years," Pearson said.

Although Pearson said he needed an administrative leave just to get away, he also said the city commission's ongoing annual evaluation of the city manager's performance has been more extensive than in the past.

Mayor Helen Cooper said city commissioners used the same format as in previous years when reviewing Pearson's performance.

Cooper said comments were encouraged in the evaluations, and her evaluation included positive comments.

Commissioners were asked to turn in individual evaluations of the city manager by March 13, and executive sessions based on the evaluations began March 21, Steve Hall, city commissioner, said.

Today's city commission meeting will begin with an executive session concerning Pearson's evaluation, Hall said.

Assistant city manager Ron Fehr is stepping in for Pearson and will assist the city commissioners at today's meeting.

Hopefully, the commissioners' evaluation will reach a conclusion during today's executive session, Hall said.

The commission agreed several weeks ago that Pearson will continue to serve in his role as city manager, and the evaluation is only reviewing his performance, Cooper said.

Pearson said the only question is what his assignments and tasks are for the upcoming year.

"I feel I have served the community more than adequately and met all the goals I was aware of," Pearson said.

Roger Maughmer, city commissioner, said he would like to see the evaluation finished before the new city commissioners step in.

"If it carries over, I don't think it's fair to the new commissioners," Maughmer said.

Maughmer said he has the utmost respect for Pearson, and he said there could be a million reasons Pearson took an administrative leave.

Pearson said taking a leave was something he has needed to do for some time to get away.

"Just the pressures of the job, and getting things done — I've probably driven myself into the ground," he said.

This year has also been a busy year, he said.

Pearson said some large projects the city has focused on in the past year include meeting requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act, trying to attract the Cessna plant, continuing work on a city business park, and the entire budget process.

Suicide bombings kill 8, wound more than 40

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — In a move that could push Palestinians closer to civil war, Yasser Arafat cracked down on Islamic militants Monday after suicide bombings killed seven Israelis and an American college student.

Gunfire broke out as some 300 Palestinian police stormed Gaza City's Zaytoun neighborhood early Tuesday.

More than 100 followers of Hamas and the smaller Islamic Jihad have been arrested since deadly back-to-back bombings Sunday near two Jewish settlements in the Gaza Strip, which is ruled by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Sheikh Ramadan Saisi, a leading fundamentalist preacher, called the Associated Press to report the raid and said police were trying to detain him and five brothers and had already seized two. Gunfire and women wailing and shouting, "Please don't beat me!" were heard in the background.

The Clinton administration on Monday applauded Arafat's tough stance.

"We expect the Palestinian authority to take this type of concrete action against those within its jurisdiction who seek to destroy the peace process through acts of violence and terror," said State Department spokeswoman Christine Shelly.

But angry Islamic militant leaders raised the specter of civil war, apparently trying to force Arafat to back down.

"If he practices this behavior, we will defend ourselves by all means," said Mahmoud Zahar, a leader of Hamas, the most powerful group opposing the faltering Israel-PLO accord.

Despite the tensions and anger, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin told negotiators to resume talks with the PLO on arranging Palestinian elections and an Israeli troop pullback to allow Palestinian self-rule in the West Bank.

The bombings wounded more than 40 people. Two of them died Monday, including Alisa M. Flatow, a 20-year-old junior at Brandeis University on vacation for Passover. She was wounded in the head while traveling to a beach resort at a Jewish settlement in the Gaza Strip.

After doctors declared her brain-dead, Alisa's father, Steve, authorized an operation to remove organs for donation. In a statement, he said his daughter loved Israel and "her lasting contribution to the people of Israel is that her organs were donated for the saving of lives in need."

The mood in Israel was somber with funerals held for the victims.

"Stop killing the soldiers," wailed Pnina Regev as the body of her son was carried to a cemetery.

Computer service faces paper inflation

LINDA HARVEY
Collegian

Rising printer paper costs and upgrades in technology have Computing and Network Services a little concerned.

So far, though, it has been able to meet the demanding cost, John Bucher, director of CNS, said.

"We've always had ongoing concerns about the costs of technology and paper," he said.

Inflation in the paper industry is now forcing administrators of CNS to take a new look at how they are going to afford the costs of paper.

"We can't do much about it," Bucher said, "but it makes us want to look for creative ways to cut paper consumption."

He said CNS has been looking into cheaper paper or regulating paper usage, but none of the solutions are very favorable.

To pay for consumables such as paper, salaries, maintenance and repairs on the computers, and software contracts, CNS has a total budget of more than $3 million allocated by the University.

Sixty percent of that $3 million goes for salaries. Another 30 to 35 percent goes to pay for what Bucher called committed contractual funding, paying for software contracts, maintenance contracts and telecommunication costs.

"When all is said and done, it doesn't leave much money for discretionary purposes, such as creating new computer labs," he said.

In the Big Eight, K-State is one of a few schools that doesn't charge a student-technology fee.

The public labs on campus are only a portion of what CNS provides for the campus. Charles Gould, microsystems support manager, said only a fraction, about $300,000, of the central budget is allocated for the public labs.

"The figure is kind of misleading," Gould said. "This goes to pay for support staff, maintenance, repair and operating supplies. It doesn't encompass other support issues, such as computing resources.

"Labs simply supply an entry point into these other services, and that leads to other hidden costs. It's really the tip of the iceberg."

Within the public lab environment, IBM compatibles and Macintosh computers are provided for campus usage.

Unix and mainframe setups are also available.

What the public might not know is that there are more than just student computing facilities on campus, Bucher said.

Administrative systems, such as the ones that handle enrollment, and faculty systems are also handled by CNS. Balancing the three has been a challenge.

"It would be ludicrous to have only one type of resource," Bucher said. "But it's a constant struggle to keep those in balance."

In order for the campus to stay competitive in computing technology, CNS now has to start considering new ways to employ the technology, Bucher said.

Bucher said increasing availability in the residence halls may be a start.

"There's no doubt that it will be a cost issue," he said. "But to reinvest in technology, we have to stay current."

Bucher said CNS is starting to wonder if it needs to move into any kind of funding.

"Do we have adequate funding for technology? I don't think there's one computer service director who would say yes," he said.

Students need chance to see Landon Lecture

Consequently, we are again asking the administration to cancel classes during the lecture.

We have a question.

As far as the administration is concerned, who is the most important group that attends the Landon Lectures?

We're not sure who's first, but we can sure tell you who's dead last.

The answer is ... the students.

A speaker of national fame will be giving the third Landon Lecture of the semester Thursday, and many K-State students want to hear him.

Unfortunately, the K-State administration doesn't seem to care whether all the students get to hear him. The powers-that-be bend over backwards to make sure the alumni get a front-row seat. The alumni-to-be can't even get out of class.

Consequently, we are again asking the administration to cancel classes during the lecture.

This isn't a plea on behalf of lazy students who just want an excuse to get out of class. We are asking for this cancellation on behalf of the K-State students in classes with professors who ignore the Landon Lectures.

The administration ignored our first request earlier this school year.

It still has time to grant our request.

TOLES

Let's see new faces, more action

ERIN MANSUR SMITH

During the last few weeks, I have been paying attention to the student body presidential elections the way I have been paying attention to the O.J. Simpson trials (yes, I said The Name).

And there is only one word that has been going around in my head the entire time: Excrement.

That's right.

"Excrement."

Elections are today and tomorrow, and I have to tell you I will be glad when this whole three-ring circus is over and done with. No more posters and neon sidewalk art. No more stomping and posturing, hand-shaking and false, plastic smiles with big booming voices droning on and on about their "issues" and the "Big Picture We All Have To Make Ourselves Be a Part Of."

I think I have had just about enough of the pseudo-political caca smeared on us like some cream cheese.

It's not even original, fresh.

It's recycled.

All the platforms sound so damned similar to one another, it would be easier on us all and quicker in general if the candidates all stood up on one platform together, let someone read the top three topics they have in common — parking, bike fees and campus safety — and have the rest of them just nod their heads and mutter a halfway intelligent "ditto" afterwards as if it were an original idea.

These "issues," while extremely pertinent, are not what should be the central theme to the platform of the student body president.

I want to see something said about GTA training on this campus, about the need for faculty pay raises and the hideous screw the Union Bookstore gives us every year on textbook buyback.

I want to see the student body president express our frustrations to the administration about classroom sizes, cut services and the haphazard, bass-ackwards way we do enrollment every year.

Can't do it? It's not in the job description? It's not within the scope of a president's powers? Make it. Push it. Mold it into what you need it to be to get the work done for us.

I want to see someone who can inspire the students to assert themselves en masse.

I want to see someone say to the Regents and President Wefald: Huddle up, people. We have got some serious work to do.

Some changes have got to be made and unless you get busy negotiating with us these issues that need to be negotiated, then be prepared to be shut down.

Getting elected is the easy part. No more sitting around arguing for six hours about Robert's Rule of Orders like empty-headed parrots.

But in order to do that, we need someone with a little more substance to their resume, a little more leadership experience than holding the head position on the committees that were influential in the push to get bagels on the menu at the K-State Union.

Community seems to be a big theme this year. Many fine speeches have been made about how K-State has to become more of a force in Manhattan at large.

Yet how many of our presidential candidates are involved in Manhattan local issues? How many of them volunteer at the local hospital? Or donate time to the Flint Hills Bread Basket? Or even the local Boy Scouts?

I did my stint in SGA, and I got out so I could make some real change. I want to see the office of student body president and vice president mean something, do something, besides introduce the Landon Lecture speakers.

I want it to be more than a prize going to "Mr./Ms. Congeniality."

It's going to start being that way. Starting now.

Be warned, you bunch out there.

We want results this time. Presidential candidates, council candidates and senate candidates, alike.

Getting elected was the easy part. No more sitting around arguing for six hours about Robert's Rule of Orders like empty-headed parrots.

No more debating the constitutionality of a stricture on unexcused absences.

No more running for president in hopes that it will better your chances to get into law school or wherever.

Do something, dammit.

For a change.

▶ "A PURPLE AFFAIR"

Readers need to tune in

Dear editor,

I am writing this letter at 11:50 p.m. on Thursday night because I am utterly frustrated at the Collegian and to every member of K-State. At approximately 10 tonight on KSDB-FM 91.9, the K-State campus and Manhattan community failed to take advantage of the incredible opportunity to learn about important issues dealing with hate, prejudice, violence, death and equal rights.

John Burris was a guest on "A Purple Affair." This wasn't just any guest, but one that was intelligent, informative and convincing. This man served as Rodney King's lawyer and shared with us the factual events of a case where a black man was beaten 57 times on camera by four Los Angeles police officers. Mr. Burris continued with his insight about urban police racism and how it affects verdicts, trials and our society. He shared with us his feelings of the violent riots in L.A. when the verdict was issued. John Burris is currently a Legal Analyst during the Simpson trial for CNN, FOX and ABC, and on numerous television and radio talk shows. His message needed to be heard on this campus. "A Purple Affair" realized this and scheduled him to appear. This is a very significant individual in our country's history, and yet there was no coverage from the Collegian or interest from the student body. Although the show was incredible in content, we did not get one phone call from the listening audience. After the show, I talked with many people who did not even know a guest of such high integrity was going to be on the talk-radio program and therefore did not listen. We promoted it on the radio, and I still do not know if our audience tonight was sufficient for the topic focused on. K-State let us down.

Aaron Decker, Audrey Taggart, Eric Ancker and I work extremely hard every single night to provide this student forum and to expand our listeners' minds. There are very few universities that have call-in talk-radio programs, and our show has been recognized as one of the most professional. But, still, we receive opposition from some students, faculty and even Jon Wefald, who has been quoted as saying "They ["A Purple Affair"] only have 10 listeners!"

I guess I look at K-State in rose-colored glasses and think that everyone cares as much as I do about reducing our problems on campus. But I see that this student body is completely apathetic to problems, conflicts, violence, racism, social issues and improvements to student life. A college education is more than what you learn in the classroom, and each member of "A Purple Affair" staff sincerely cares about the students on campus and the issues facing them. This student body needs to start getting involved and start caring about the quality of their education and the important issues on campus.

"The key is communication, and that's exactly what we are trying to do."

STEPHEN B. SEELY
co-host of "Purple Affair"

This can be achieved by voting during SGA elections, getting involved in Student Senate, reading and writing to the Collegian, listening and calling in to "A Purple Affair" and getting involved in organizations that want to improve student life on campus.

Our show continues the rest of this semester and will continue next year, but its success is determined by every individuals' concern and participation on this campus. The key is communication, and that's exactly what we are trying to do.

▶ HOMOSEXUALITY

Columnist needs new topic

Dear editor,

I have seen three columns written by Kevyn Jacobs. All of them centered around the topic of homosexuality.

I personally do not have a problem with the fact that Kevyn Jacobs is homosexual or that he wants to inform people about the things that concern homosexuals.

But, as far as I know from the papers I've read, he hasn't written about a single other topic editorially.

Why is this?

He seems to be quite capable of writing what he thinks.

The heterosexual editorial writers don't spend all their time writing about being heterosexual.

I would like to see Kevyn Jacobs give another topic a shot.

▶ RELIGION

Students turn to God

People seek religion to help them solve problems

ANNE HAZLETT
Collegian

Life cannot be treated like a math equation.

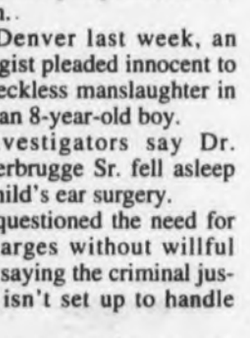
"The certainty you can find in two times two equals four cannot be found in life," Virgil Warren, professor of theology, said at Manhattan Christian College, Monday in a speech at the K-State Union.

"People who are looking for a belief system to provide this certainty are looking for something that can't be attained," Warren said.

The speech was sponsored by ICTHUS and InterVarsity Christian Fellowship.

Students and faculty, regardless of age, race or background, have four basic needs that cannot be escaped, Warren said.

"Regardless of technology, humans have a need for security," he said.



"We are all subject to forces beyond our control," Warren said.

Warren said people also have a need to find meaning in their lives.

"Mankind is fighting a need for self-worth," Warren said. "To deny this is to deny your existence."

In addition to finding meaning in their lives, Warren said people have a need to be loved.

"We have a drive to be cared about by other people. There is nothing wrong with this because to be loved by another is to be alive," he said.

In living, Warren said humans also have a need to feel innocent.

"The failure to remain completely true to our values brings guilt," he said. "We will never rid the world of guilt because the world cannot exist without values."

Warren said it is these four needs that bring people into a relationship with God.

"These needs do not have answers but they are real," he said. "Christianity is a way of turning to an almighty power to face our problems."

Unlike many solutions to present needs, Warren said Christianity is not a leap of faith.

"By listening to the testimonials of others, you can see what you are getting into before you jump," he said.

The need for security, meaning, love and innocence also drives people already practicing the Christian faith to grow in their relationship with God, Warren said.

"All problems can be evaluated by the three-part sequence of need, use, answer," he said.

"As Christians, we do not get to the end and stop. Rather, we come back around, turning to God with a new need," Warren said.

Heather Hjetland, sophomore in agricultural journalism, said she agrees with Warren.

"As a college student, I have found I turn to God often for support," she said. "In fact, I pray before every test."

Michelle Ecklund, senior in pest science management and agricultural economics, said she also prays before examinations.

"With the course load I have this semester, I pray a lot," Ecklund said.

Newspaper, yearbook editors chosen

KIMBERLY HEFLING
SARA SMITH
Collegian

The summer and fall K-State Collegian editors and advertising managers, as well as the 1996 Royal Purple editor, have been selected.

The Board of Student Publications made its decisions Thursday and Monday night.

Mike Marlett, senior in journalism and mass communications, said he was honored to be chosen as the summer editor. Marlett said he wanted to make the summer Collegian a more in-depth, magazine-style newspaper because it only comes out once a week.

"It becomes an issue of quality over quantity," he said.

N. Stewart "Neil" Anderson, the current Collegian editor, was selected as the fall 1995 editor.

"I applied for editor again to continue the progress the Collegian has made this semester. I want to build these strides forward into strong foundations for future staffs," Anderson, senior in journalism and mass communications, said.

Sarah Kallenbach, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, was chosen to be the Royal Purple editor.

Kallenbach said the 1996 yearbook will look familiar to readers.

"In general, you won't see any major changes," she said. "But I'd like to try new ideas with design and graphics.

"In addition, I'd like to work more toward covering the campus as a whole. I'd like to see everybody covered in the book."

Trice Alford, junior in speech, was selected to be the summer ad manager.

Alford said his responsibilities will include marketing the weekly Collegian and planning advertising for the campus directory and the fall preview.

Alford said he's not sure exactly what changes are in store for the summer, but he said he will be meeting soon with Gloria Freeland, advertising adviser, and Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc., as well as the assistant ad manager and editor of the Collegian.

"I really don't know for sure," he said. "We'll sit down and reevaluate the past summers' papers and see how they've gone and try to market the paper even better."

Amy Henderson, senior in advertising, will be the fall ad manager.

"Basically, my goal is to improve motivation and increase sales in the advertising department by implementing creative ways to assist ad reps in their sales," she said.

Henderson said she would like to do this by bringing in professionals to speak to the ad staff. In addition, Henderson said communication will be stressed.

"Communication within the ad staff is important because, in turn, we'll have better communication with our clientele," she said.

Anderson and 1995 Royal Purple editor Todd Fleischer were both awarded the Kansas Associated Collegiate Press Collegiate Journalist of the Year Award Friday.

"It's a nice complement to a hard year's work," Anderson said.

Fleischer, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, said he appreciated receiving the award because it was on a state level.

"It was really fun to be recognized by people around here," he said.

Along with the awards Anderson and Fleischer received, the Royal Purple was given a stack of 38 certificates from KACP for design, writing and photography, where it swept several categories.

Johnson said the awards were just a reflection of the quality of K-State's yearbook.

Jury suggests charging lab in deaths

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILWAUKEE — Honoring Karin Smith's dying wish, an inquest jury is recommending homicide charges against those who misread the Pap smears that could have saved her life and that of another woman.

The district attorney is expected to decide this week whether to file charges against the laboratory, a technician and the doctor in charge of the lab in the case of Smith and Dolores Geary, both of whom died of cervical cancer.

District Attorney E. Michael McCann charged that the women were victims of indifference and blatant errors.

An expert testified at the inquest that the laboratory missed unmistakable signs of cancer.

It is rare for criminal charges to be filed against a doctor, laboratories or technicians over mistakes.

McCann said the inquest jury of six laymen was the first in Wisconsin to consider criminal charges for a fatal misdiagnosis.

Lawsuits and other civil actions are the usual course of action in cases of negligence and errors.

Smith died March 8 at age 29 after asking McCann to launch the investigation.

She testified before a congressional committee a year ago that she was dying because her health-maintenance organization didn't have the Pap smears diagnosed correctly.

"It was her wish for someone to pursue this because she felt it went beyond negligence," said her father, Jorgen Knudsen.

"She didn't want it to happen to anyone else," said her mother, Marlene Knudsen.

The Smith and Geary families settled lawsuits against the women's HMO and the lab. Smith and her husband got $6.3 million, and the Gearys got $3.5 million.

American Medical Association general counsel Kirk Johnson said the usual punishment for negligent doctors or technicians is for licensing boards to take away their credentials.

"They're basically just banished from their profession. It's a pretty serious sanction," Johnson said.

In other cases of criminal charges against a doctor, Dr. Gerald Einaugler of New York was ordered last month to spend 52 weekends in jail for reckless endangerment and other offenses in the death of a nursing home patient.

He mistook a dialysis tube for a feeding tube and pumped food into her abdomen.

And in Denver last week, an anesthesiologist pleaded innocent to charges of reckless manslaughter in the death of an 8-year-old boy.

State investigators say Dr. Joseph J. Verbrugge Sr. fell asleep during the child's ear surgery.

Johnson questioned the need for criminal charges without willful misconduct, saying the criminal justice system isn't set up to handle such cases.

"It seems to me you have a state medical board designed to deal with this very kind of thing. If you can find this element of willfulness and knowledge, obviously a criminal case can be made," he said.

During last week's three-day inquest, experts testified cancer was evident in the Pap smears — gynecological tests for cervical cancer — years before Smith and Geary had their diseases diagnosed.

The women belonged to the same HMO, Family Health Plan.

In the case of Geary, a mother of three from suburban Oak Creek, a Pap smear in 1987 was reported as normal but showed obvious signs of cancer, said one of the experts who testified, Dr. Billy J. Bauman, medical director of the Dane County Cytology Center.

"It isn't very often that you see that number of malignant cells on a slide," he testified.

The laboratory reported another Pap smear as normal, but when Geary underwent a hysterectomy in 1991, she was found to have advanced cancer of the cervix. She died in 1993 at age 40.

Bauman said the presence of cancer was "unequivocal" in slides from Pap smears done in 1988 and 1989 on Smith, a Nashotah accountant.

Her cancer wasn't diagnosed until she saw a doctor outside her HMO in 1991.

While the slides didn't show how far the cancer had progressed at the time of the tests, Bauman noted that cervical cancer is "100-percent curable if it's picked up early."

"Once it becomes invasive, then it's bad news. It's a bad way to die," he said.

Martin E. Kohler, the lawyer for the laboratory, Chem-Bio Corp. of Oak Creek, said the inquest was biased because, as in a grand jury hearing, the district attorney decided who testified.

"The corporation knows this entire situation has been a tragic and emotional matter, but it's not a situation that warrants criminal charges," Kohler said.

But McCann told the jury that charges were warranted because the laboratory:

- Used a "piece-rate" system for analysis of Pap smears, with the technician in question examining 20,000 to 40,000 a year, compared with the maximum of 12,000 recommended under professional standards;
- Failed to install random controls to check the quality of the Pap smear analysis;
- And showed indifference toward professional standards and the need for continuing education.

It's that time of the year.

With the official signing date coming up on Wednesday, it is time for the K-State basketball team to replenish its supply of basketball players.

K-State has been recruiting several players to fill the holes left by the graduation of Demond Davis, Belvis Noland, Stanley Hamilton and Hamilton Strickland.

During the fall signing period, K-State received three commitments to its program.

Manny Dies, a 6-foot-8-inch, 230-pound forward out of Wichita South High School, Shawn Rhodes, a 6-foot-10-inch, 220-pound center from Wichita Northeast, and Johnnie Williams, a 6-foot-9-inch, 245-pound forward from Cloud County Community College, all signed letters of intent to the basketball program in fall.

The following players are some of the individuals that K-State are reported to be interested in.

Anton Hubert is a 6-foot guard from McPherson Community Central College who averaged 22.4 points a game, which included hitting 45 percent from three-point range while dishing out 69 assists.

McPherson's coach Mike Beard said Hubert is expected to sign with K-State Wednesday.

"It is about as sure of a thing as you can possibly get," Beard said.

If Hubert holds to his promise, there will be one remaining scholarship to fill during the spring signing period.

Hubert was also recruited by Wake Forest, Iowa State, Washington State, Minnesota, Hawaii and Creighton.

Beard said Hubert is an athletic player who has the ability to hit the jump shot or drive to the basket.

"He is very athletic, very quick, and he shoots it very well," Beard said.

Despite Hubert's ability to score, Beard said he can also play the point position.

"I think he has the ability to play at either the point or off-guard position," Beard said. "He's not very big, but he makes up for it by being a very good basketball player."

Another possible recruit is Gerald Eaker, a 6-foot-11-inch, 230-pound center from Southeastern Community College in Burlington, Iowa.

Eaker, who went to the same high school Isiah Thomas did, averaged 15.1 points, 5.8 rebounds and 4.2 blocks a game last year and shot 63 percent from the floor. Acker originally signed with Ohio State before transferring to Southeastern Community College.

Schools that are also interested in Eaker are Kentucky, Alabama Birmingham and West Virginia.

K-State has also been in contact with the following players.

Bobby Jackson is a 6-foot-1-inch guard from Nebraska Western Community College. Jackson averaged 16 points a game last season. He is also interested in Arizona.

Sharif Butler is a 6-foot-2-inch guard from Gulf Coast Community College who averaged more than 20 points a game last season. Butler is also interested in Oklahoma and Texas Christian.

Other players K-State has made contacts with are Seward County's Martin Lewis, who has verbally committed to Oklahoma State, and Barton County product Juan Gay, who verbally committed to DePaul.

Cats looking to increase depth

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

Coming off their first winning season since 1990-91, K-State will look to increase their depth with a host of new recruits. The Cats signed two players in the fall, and the spring signing period begins Wednesday.

Coach Brian Agler has already signed one junior-college standout and one high-school star.

Kayla Hester — A 6-foot post from Seward County Community College, Hester should be able to step in and contribute immediately. The Beaver, Okla., native averaged 18.9 points and 10.4 rebounds per game as a sophomore and set a single-game scoring record at Seward with 36 points.

Able to play both inside and out, Hester shot 57 percent from the field, including 38 percent from three-point range. Hester led Seward to a 25-7 record and led all scorers in the Jayhawk Conference East-West All-Star game with 19 points.

"Kayla has the versatility for both the inside and outside games," Jim Littell, Hester's coach at Seward, said. "She is very strong and physical but handles the ball well and can shoot it from the perimeter. These skills should allow her to adapt very quickly to Coach Agler's motion offense."

Jenny Coalson — A 5'11" wing from Ellicott High School in Calhan, Colo., Coalson has won recognition as a standout in volleyball, track and rodeo in addition to her prowess on the court. As a junior, Coalson averaged 22 points and 12 rebounds per game and was chosen as Colorado's Player of the Year.

"Jenny is a well-rounded athlete and a slashing type of basketball player," Agler said. "And she's got that drive and mental toughness that will allow her to come in and contribute right away. She has good size for a perimeter player, and we are looking for her to develop into a two or three (wing positions)."

In addition to Hester and Coalson, the Cats are looking at four other players, two from Moberly Community College in Missouri and two out of high school.

Carrie Ragar — A 6' post, Ragar averaged 23.7 points and 11.6 rebounds per game on a team that finished 15-12. Ragar tied the single-game rebounding record at Moberly with 23, and her 11.6 average is the highest in school history. Ragar is also looking at UMKC, Southeast Missouri State, Arkansas State and Quincy College.

"Carrie is a strong post player," Moberly coach Kevin Fricke said. "She is a very good scorer inside and can step out to the high post and shoot the 15-footer."

Jamie Koester — A 5'11" wing, Koester averaged 19.1 points and 7.2 rebounds per game. A threat from inside and outside, Koester blocked 54 shots in 27 games while shooting 49 percent from behind the arc. She is also looking at Fresno State, Arkansas State, Southeast Missouri State, UMKC and Ole Miss.

"Jamie shoots the ball very well, and she gets to the basket quick," Fricke said.

"Carrie and Jamie are very good athletes very capable of competing at the Division I level. They play against Proposition 48 players all year, and the schedule we play is among the top 10 in the country. They'll make a great addition to any program," Fricke said.

Fricke said both players had indicated that K-State is their first choice, but that it's best to wait and see.

"You never know what can happen in 48 hours," he said.

Kari Willingham — A 6'2" post from Perkins High School in Oklahoma, Willingham averaged 27.9 points and 2.3 rebounds per game.

An all-state selection, Willingham will have to adjust from the six-on-six format played in the smaller Oklahoma schools to the more traditional five-on-five game.

"Kari is really fundamentally sound and should be able to come in and contribute early on," Jim Burnett, coach at Perkins High School, said.

"She has been playing AAU ball, and that should help her. She will still need to adjust to the physical play in the Big Eight, but she's got great quickness and runs the floor well."

Though she is also being courted by Oklahoma State and UC-Irvine, Burnett said he expects Willingham to sign with K-State.

"I think she is planning on playing in Manhattan next year. I think she'll sign the letter on Wednesday," Burnett said.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL RECRUITING

Shelly Jackson — A 5'9" guard from Ardmore High School in Oklahoma, Jackson averaged 20.7 points, 6.8 rebounds and 3.1 steals per game, leading Ardmore to a 20-7 season and the semifinals at state. Jackson scored 30 points or more in three games, including a single-game record of 38 points, and shot 42 percent from three-point range.

"Shelly will probably play a two-guard in college," Ardmore coach Cliff Cotton said.

"Her range goes out to the three-point arc, and she can take it on the block. She should be a consistent scorer at the Division I level."

Cotton said Jackson would be visiting K-State this weekend, and will make a decision after her visit.

She is also looking at Oklahoma State, Tennessee-Chattanooga, Texas A&M and Southwest Missouri State.

Coaches needed for summer leagues

JILL TEGTMEIER

If you've got the professional baseball blues and are ready to see some action, Manhattan youth may be able to offer some relief this summer.

Manhattan Parks and Recreation is accepting registrations for the 1995 Youth T-ball, baseball and softball summer programs. The season runs from mid-May until the end of July, with games played Monday through Thursday evenings.

Mike Buchanan, recreation supervisor, said 1,800 area youth are expected to sign up for the summer program.

"So far, numbers look good. Friday is the last day to sign up, and the last three days of registration are always the busiest. About 50 percent of the players sign up during this time," he said.

Buchanan said registration forms for players are available at all area schools or at the Parks and Recreation Office at 1101 Fremont Ave. There is a $10 fee to help cover part of the cost of running the program.

T-ball is available to boys and girls completing first grade. Softball and baseball leagues are available for girls and boys completing grades 2-12.

Buchanan said he is looking for committed people who like to work with kids and also know something about the game to be volunteer coaches.

"We have had a good relationship with K-State students as coaches. K-State is a good resource for us," he said.

Buchanan said coaching a summer ball team can be a positive and meaningful volunteer opportunity.

"It gives you a good feeling to take children who don't know one another and get them to form a team. We want the mission of the coach to be providing a positive experience for each player. If the coach enjoys it, the players usually will, too," Buchanan said.

COACHES NEEDED

Those interested in coaching youth T-ball, baseball or softball teams this summer should contact Mike Buchanan at 587-2757.

Big Dogs whip Udders

SCOTT REYNOLDS
Collegian

The No. 1-ranked co-ed intramural softball team, Big Dogs, ran its record to 3-0 as it defeated the Udders 16-1 Sunday.

Despite the light drizzle, gusty winds from the north and a 32-degree wind chill, the Big Dogs hammered out 19 hits in five innings of play at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Udders 1

"We hadn't played past four innings until today," said Big Dogs' Jeff Meyer, graduate student in food and nutrition. The intramural 15-run rule went into effect in the bottom of the fifth inning when Jason Brummett, junior in animal science, hit a two-run triple to end the game.

Despite scoring only one run, the Udders cranked out eight hits against Big Dogs and only trailed 3-0 after the first inning.

The game broke open in the second inning when the Udders started off well with two walks. The Udders' lone run would score off the only hit in the top of the inning. But the Udders' chances slipped away early in the game when they left two runners stranded.

A two-run homer by the Big Dogs' Dave Amaro, a K-State alumnus, and a two-run triple by Lance Wilson, senior in pre-medicine, accounted for four runs out of the five in the second inning. After two innings of play, the score was 8-1 with the Big Dogs leading.

After a scoreless third inning, the Big Dogs put the game away behind the steady pitching of Lynn Holzman, senior in kinesiology. In the bottom of the fifth, Amaro knocked in two more runs and left the cleanup duties to Brummett, who finished the game with his two-run triple.

The Udders' captain, Sam Rottinghaus, junior in veterinary medicine, said his team wasn't ready for Big Dogs' power.

"We didn't scout them. Heck, we didn't know they were in our league," he said.

Romance with professor a problem

Dear Cassie,

I am in real trouble.

I fell in love with this guy. We have been friends for a long time, and I enjoy our conversations and the things we do together. We haven't slept together. As a matter of fact, he doesn't even know about my feelings for him.

That's not the problem, Cassie. The problem is that he is my professor. How do I approach him with these feelings? I don't know how much longer I can keep this a secret.

Fallen and Can't Get Up.

Dear Fallen,

Ugh, this is a hard one.

If your love is a graduate student and/or you are not taking his class, it is not a problem.

This University kind of frowns on this type of thing. If you really love him, you'll leave him alone.

Painting Memories

Breathe deep of the salty breeze
that rustles the leaves below.
Witness a golden orb gently pushing waves to the shore as it sinks out of sight.
The darkening sky reaches red and purple fingers outward to cover all in a blanket of night.

Thin blades of grass grow long and green waiting to tickle the unwary toe.
Wade through the lush, green carpet to see what lies ahead.
Drink in the cool feeling of relaxation, found in the joy of being.

Capture the colors, the air, the endless sea and paint a picture of your thoughts on the canvas of your mind.
A bold vision of all you see and experience to hang in your gallery called "Memories."
None of the fabled masters could accomplish such great works like the painting of your memories.

Pieces

As I read the note
(for that's all it was)
I knew my heart was lost.

Words cut like razors slicing off the page and severing the strings that held my heart fast.

As the last string let loose its hold,
my heart began to fall, rapidly picking up speed till it was racing out of control.

Just a name at the bottom
that's all there was.
Six letters sat alone, stronger than any wall ever built.

No slowing the racing of my heart, when my eyes hit your name
my heart hit the wall and shattered.

After six and a half years of my life a few limp strings and pieces of my heart are left scattered about the floor.

Poems by Mike Bunch, senior in journalism and mass communications

I Am Alive

I can't lie ... damaged my pride, but I am alive.
Paint your life ... onto mine ... I hope you don't mind.

Warm outside ... I'm by your side, I am alive.
Cold outside ... draw me inside, we'll survive.

No longer able to stand ... my own demands
No longer hurt myself; never helped me to understand
I'd come apart at the seams; think I'm unexplained
When melodies sprang from her loom until ...
only songs remained.

Rainy drive ... oh you'll find ... I'm in the sky.
Dream tonight ... I'm by your side ... and I will arrive.

No longer able to stand ... my own demands
No longer cut myself; never helped me to understand.
I'd come apart at the seams; think I'm unex plained
When melodies sprang from her loom until ...
only songs remained.

UPC continues contest tradition

COLLEGIAN STAFF

On three, say cheese.

The Union Program Council is sponsoring its 20th annual photography contest.

UPC is accepting applications until April 17, and the winning photos will be displayed in the Union Art Gallery from April 24 through May 10.

Sharon Willits, adviser of the UPC photo contest, said it has a very strong tradition.

The reason the contest has been so successful in the past is because of the caliber of work that is submitted, Chrissy Hathaway, past UPC arts chairperson, said.

Hathaway said it has been a popular event, which has received strong support not only from K-State but also within the community.

"I'm always so impressed with the work that is submitted. And each year I always think its better than the previous year," she said.

UPC is accepting photos in eight categories. They include buildings and structures, landscape, a captured feeling, animals, people, still life, a K-State winter scene, and campus/student life.

Hathaway said prizes will be awarded for the top photos in each category.

The first prize is $20, the second prize is $10 and the best in the show is $40.

The show is judged by three people who have photography experience, Willits said.

"The judges have not yet been selected, but we choose judges with some background in photography. Whether it is with teaching or as a hobby," she said.

Hathaway said she encourages anyone who is interested to stop by the UPC office and pick up an information sheet.

"The contest is a great way to showcase students' work who are interested in photography," she said.

Candidates' last gasp

Presidential candidates use last night to campaign

The last night before student elections, candidates for student body president and vice president took a final stab at persuading voters to cast ballots in their favor.

Candidates spent their last night of campaigning speaking to student groups around town and addressing students concerns.

Elections are today and Wednesday.

Scott Phillips, candidate for student body president, said he represents action, not just position.

Phillips, junior in public relations, highlighted some of his campaign issues for the women of Sigma Sigma Sigma Monday.

He presented them with a book that contained 20 pieces of legislation to be implemented within the first 60 days of his administration if he is elected.

One of the programs is the Reach Out Development program, which sets up mentor programs between students and faculty, and between students and students.

Phillips has vowed to use the $5,400 salary the student body president and vice president receive to go toward a program the students choose.

The program Phillips said he wanted to promote is SafeRide, a national program founded at Troy State in Alabama to eliminate drunken driving and develop an extended escort service.

Liz Ring, candidate for student body president, said her leadership style would be focused on teamwork between herself, the vice president and students. She and other presidential candidates spoke to the engineering ambassadors Monday night.

Ring and running mate Paul Friedrichs have three issues they are addressing in their campaign.

Ring's first issue centers on student empowerment.

Ring said she wants to get students involved with the Kansas Board of Regents while giving students a say in things like tuition rates.

If Ring and her running mate are elected, they said they want to have round-table discussion groups and cabinet meetings so students can be involved in their administration.

Their second issue deals with linear fees, which would allow students to pay by the credit hour with a cap at 15 hours. Students taking more than 15 hours would pay a fixed rate that is the same as 15 hours, she said.

The other issue Ring and Friedrichs spoke on dealt with fiscal responsibility.

Ring and Friedrichs are against any special student fees, which include the international student fee, graduation fee and bicycle registration fee.

Getting students registered to vote in Riley County is a significant part of the Tomb and Tomb campaign, said Andrew Tomb, student body presidential candidate.

Andrew Tomb spoke to a group of 10 women on Ford Hall's eighth floor.

Tomb also stressed Student Senate doing its own long-term planning as opposed to passing the administration's annual agenda.

Essentially, the administration has been taking advantage of the turnover in student government every year to keep pushing its own agendas, Andrew Tomb said.

Tomb used the parking garage as an example.

"The administration is not keeping it any secret they want a parking garage," Andrew Tomb said.

Mark Tomb, candidate for student body vice-president, said the Tombs would not support the parking garage unless it was built with user fees or by an outside contractor. That way, students would not have to pay for it unless they used it, he said.

Andrew Tomb said he saw the president as the students' representative to the administration.

"Student body president shouldn't be a career," Andrew Tomb said.

Presidential candidate Jeremy Blair laid out his issues while speaking to residents of Marlatt Hall Monday night.

He said he is against the physical-education requirement.

"It should be available but not required. I can think of 10 other classes I would rather take."

Blair said he is against implementing a user-fee system to charge people for the services they use, except maybe for Lafene Health Center.

He said he supports expanding the escort service as well as supplementing it with a beeper system that would help K-State Police find students within 30 seconds. Doug Bassett, Blair's running mate, said the beeper system is in place at other universities.

Blair said he is in favor of making Parking Services service-oriented. By giving students loads of tickets all of the time,it is not doing a service; it is being a dictatorship, Blair said.

"Parking Services needs an attitude adjustment," he said.

Blair said he wants to make the K-State Union profitable. He said making Union Program Council more accountable on the activities and events it brings into the Union would help.

Jeff Peterson, candidate for student body president, took his issues over the air on the KSDB-FM 91.9 talk show "A Purple Affair" Monday night.

Peterson, graduate student in animal science, focused on cost concerns, optional student fees and campus safety.

Peterson, who is running for his second term as student body president, said he wanted to make certain student fees optional, such as those for Lafene, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the Royal Purple yearbook.

"It's logistically possible to make some student fees into user fees," he said. "It's fair. It also,encourages them to be the best you can find anywhere."

Brad Finkeldei, who is seeking reelection for student body vice president, addressed the issue of campus safety.

Finkeldei, senior in chemistry, said the escort system was unified this year through the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls and the K-State Police by creating one phone number to call.

Student candidates join political parties for support

Cole, junior in political science and philosophy, are running for arts and sciences seats together. Their party is called Jason².

Dechant said he thought political parties were positive because they cut down on waste and allow people with similar ideas to band together.

"Jason Cole and I have some of the same views," Dechant said.

The main plank of their party platform is to increase the accountability of student government and the state government to the students at K-State, he said.

They have chosen to make it a personal goal to follow the students' money and see what it is used for, Dechant said.

Dechant said they chose their party name because Jason² symbolizes voting for two people with similar ideas and ways of implementing them.

"I think it would be important to make sure every member of the party represents the party well," he said.

The Students for Students Party members are all running for the Board of Student Publications.

"I chose to join the Students for Students party because I think they represent positive goals for the Board of Student Publications," Lin Bliss, junior in history and premedicine, said.

Bliss said he thought the members of the party would be an outstanding group of people to work with.

Students for Students was started last year by Aaron Otto, sophomore in political science and business, and a friend. Otto said he decided to keep the party going this year.

"I hope to help with the changes the party has put forth in its platform," Bliss said.

Bliss and Otto are running for Arts and Sciences Council, and Otto is running for Student Senate.

The Wild Turkee Worker's Party spans several colleges and many campus races as well.

Besides sharing the views of the party members, Jake Breeding, sophomore in pre-medicine, said joining the Wild Turkees was a good way of getting his name out.

With all the names on the signs for the Wild Turkees, Breeding said he thought the number of people in the party could be seen as a disadvantage.

"There are a lot of names, and it's hard to remember, but there are a lot of people on there who have done good things in Senate," he said.

For the Equality Party, filing as a party was more of a formality than a decision based on goals for a group.

"It was more of a formality that we had to declare it so we could put an ad in the paper," said Kristin McDonald, Equality Party member and freshman in pre-occupational therapy kinesiology.

The members of the party decided to run together so they could afford more advertising, McDonald said.

The women are all running together, not against each other, said Becky Jueneman, party member and freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications.

Three of the members are already on the council, she said.

Although they have similar views on many issues, the party does not really have a platform, she said.

McDonald said the group could run more on their individual ideas rather than having to change their beliefs to fit in with the other members of the party.

Christina Daniels, freshman in accounting and pre-law, said she joined the Harambe Party to get her name out better.

"Three of the four of us have not run before," Daniels said. "We thought it would be best for all of us if we ran as a party."

Daniels said she hoped to gain the positive experience of running for office. She said the only disadvantage she could see was that a candidate might not be seen as an individual.

Candidates running in a party have to get out more and let people know who they are, she said.

"Basically, we're running because there isn't enough representation for minorities," Daniels said.

The name of the party, Harambe, is Swahili for "We come together." Daniels said her party wants students to see Senate as a place where students can come together and make changes.

Bomb made with data from Internet

CAPE GIRARDEAU, Mo. — A bomb found in a teen-ager's bedroom was made with information gathered from the Internet computer service, police in this southeast Missouri town said Monday.

The boy's father walked into police headquarters on Wednesday with a device he found in his son's bedroom.

"It was determined it was a bomb," police chief Howard Boyd said Monday. "It was a fairly sophisticated device, constructed of gun powder and gasoline with styrofoam melted into the gasoline. It formed a napalm-like substance that will stick to you and burn, like they used in Vietnam."

Boyd said the case is still under investigation and no charges have been filed. He would not release the boy's name or age.

The teen had learned how to make the bomb from another youth, who pulled the instructions from the Internet, Boyd said. The Internet is a communications system available through a modem to computer users.

"We got a warning flyer from the FBI several months ago that this information was on the Internet, and we heard last fall that this stuff had, been passed around by the junior-high and high-school crowd," Boyd said. "But this was the first time somebody had used it."

Dole wants to revamp taxes

the straitjacket of the next," he said. "In giving to Washington our responsibility to address problems close to their source, Americans have unwittingly encouraged the federal government to become too large, too remote, too unresponsive and too undemocratic to be representative."

Dole said America's leaders have become too isolated and have lost the idea that we are one nation under God.

"We are bound by our heritage to a set of common values: hard work, integrity, responsibility. These values have always been the source of our strength and the glue that holds us together," Dole said.

Dole said his mandate for president would be to rein in the federal government to set free the spirit of the American people, to reconnect the government in Washington with the common-sense values of the citizens, and to reassert American interests wherever and whenever they are challenged around the world.

"My guide in this would be the final piece of the Bill of Rights — the 10th Amendment," he said. "It reads: 'The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states or to the people.'"

Dole said Americans need a president who will say yes to the American people, instead of a president who says no to every spending cut and every attempt to return power and money to the states.

"If we are truly to rein in government, we must have a president who is more than a clever apologist for the status quo," Dole said. "In 1992, Bill Clinton ran for president as the candidate of change. In 1996, he will seek re-election as a candidate pledged to prevent change at all cost."

Dole said it is possible to cut taxes and balance the budget.

"Middle-class families are forced to send too much of their hard-earned money to Washington," he said. "We should provide a tax credit for children and remove the marriage penalty to strengthen our families. And we should cut the capital-gains tax to stimulate economic growth, create new jobs and expand opportunity for all our people."

Dole said balancing the budget will also be a top priority because the United States cannot continue mortgaging its children's futures.

"This is just the first step, not the last," Dole said. "We need a president committed to making our tax system lower, fairer, flatter, simpler — so that ordinary people like you and me could fill out our tax form without a lawyer or an accountant or both."

The federal bureaucracy can be reduced by streamlining four of the most ineffective, burdensome and meddlesome departments, Dole said. These departments are the education, housing and urban development, energy, and commerce departments.

Dole said together these departments spend more than $74 billion a year and employ more than 74,000 workers.

"Let's close down the education department and spend the money on our children, not bureaucracies and red tape, and let us implement school choice to return power to parents," he said.

HUD has become a cash cow for big-city mayors and the well-connected, Dole said.

"We should give housing vouchers to those who need them and get the government out of the landlord business altogether," he said.

Dole said there are many other questions we should ask ourselves.

"We spend hundreds of millions of dollars on the Endowment for the Arts and Humanities," he said. "Why is the federal government in the culture business in this explosion of the information age? Why do we have a Corporation for Public Broadcasting?"

Dole said there are other areas that cry out for reform that he will be talking about at a greater length in the year ahead. Dole said he supported turning welfare decisions over to state governments and working more with state and local governments to fight crime.

"When we take our revolution to the White House in 1996, we will vow that American politics will be determined by us, not by the United Nations," he said. "Let us remember that America has been the greatest force for good the world has ever known."

Dole said when he visited France for the 50th anniversary of D-Day last year, he was reminded of why Americans had been sent there, about the America of his youth and the Americans they were risking their lives to protect and their hopes for the generations who would follow them.

"And then I thought about the America we live in now and the America still great and still the beacon of freedom around the world, but an America that is headed in the wrong direction.

"Standing there, gazing across the peaceful fields, I thought of why it is critical to have a president who knows what made America great, who knows what has been sacrificed to keep us free and who would do all in his power to lead America back to her place in the sun," he said.

Adrian Guerrero, freshman in criminology, said he came to see Dole because Dole is a Kansan.

Guerrero said he likes Dole's views and admires him for being a veteran. Guerrero said he thinks having Dole as president would be good for Kansas.

"We're kind of a small state," he said. "Having a powerhouse like Dole in office might make people think differently about Kansas."

Jason Bitter, freshman in finance, said he wanted to come out and support Dole as a member of College Republicans.

"I think with the Republicans in Congress and Bill Clinton's record, Clinton doesn't stand much of a chance in '96," he said. "Maybe it's time the values and other things the Midwest represents are represented in Congress."

Elections updated; computer polling possible next year

"That's what's going to take awhile," Schneiter said.

All results will be posted at noon Thursday outside the Office of Student Activities and Services, he said. The Elections Committee will have the phone numbers of all the student body presidential parties so they can be contacted as soon as the results are known, he said.

"If we know before 2 a.m., we'll give them a call," Schneiter said.

Last year, the committee was rushed, and the results given after the election were not accurate, he said. Schneiter said there is no reason to rush the results.

"We don't have the technology, and we want to be right," he said.

The Scan-TRON ballots cost $550, which is the same amount spent on the printed ballots last year, Schneiter said.

Scan-TRON has been used for voting in the past, Nolfi said.

When Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement, was student government adviser, the elections were done by Scan-TRON, she said.

Nolfi said she did not know why student government had moved away from Scan-TRON, but she said she was looking forward to using it this year and improving the system next year.

The Elections Committee originally talked about voting by computer, Schneiter said. The committee wanted to go with something better than circling names on a sheet of paper, he said.

"We're all humans. Humans make errors," he said.

Although the committee did not have time to get a computer polling program set up for this year, it is in the works for next year, Schneiter said.

Nolfi said K-State has the technology and the know-how to make a computer polling system a reality, but student government must stand in line behind other administration projects, such as the new enrollment project.

Next year, college councils will be involved in the elections, she said. Councils will have to provide volunteers to work the polls, and polls will be set up in more places.

Schneiter said students will be able to vote from every computer lab on campus through a program set up on the mainframe or a PC set up by the Elections Committee.

Two computers or so will be set up specifically for voting. Students will sit down and type in their Social Security number. The computer will ask them a question, and then they will be able to vote, he said.

Committee sees fewer complaints with new signature requirement wrong, and I'd personally call the candidate and tell them they need to fix it," he said.

Most of the voiced complaints have focused on small things like candidate posters.

"I have had my signs covered a little, but the person wasn't even running within the same college, so it wasn't a big deal," Aubrey Abbott, freshman in political science, said.

Abbott said she chose to call the candidate and ask her to fix the problem instead of filing a formal complaint.

She said unless it was an extreme case, she would not file a grievance.

The Elections Committee has added something new to the grievance policy. In order to file a complaint, candidates must sign their names to it.

Abbot said she thought having to put names on complaints persuades some people not to report a violation.

"When you have to sign your name to it, it makes you think about what it is. It might make you realize how petty you're being and make you change your mind," she said.

This has also helped cut down on the number of false grievances, Schneiter said.

"In the past, anyone could report a grievance and didn't have to leave their name. A lot of people used to file a report just to cause problems," Schneiter said.

Raspberry to provide insight of columnist

COBY HESS
Collegian

K-State's 101st Landon Lecture will present one of the nation's best-known newspaper columnists.

William Raspberry, the Washington Post's urban-affairs columnist, will be visiting Manhattan this week.

Raspberry will speak at 10:30 a.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

Raspberry

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lectures, said he is a regular reader of Raspberry's column.

"The arguments that he presents in his column are very cogent and independent. He is a very thoughtful and insightful commentator on what he sees," Reagan said.

Raspberry is a syndicated columnist whose articles are published in 203 newspapers and read by millions.

Reagan said Raspberry's column is also popular internationally.

"I came up with the idea to invite Mr. Raspberry to our lecture series when I was in Paris reading his column in the International Herald Tribune," he said.

Raspberry said in his column, he tries to speak the truth as clearly as he can.

"I assume the obligation that if I am going to be worth reading, I will say, as clearly as I can,

Franklin: Speaking freely about Jesus rare

JANICE SWICKARD
Collegian

If everyone peeled their skin back, they would probably find that everyone is very similar, said Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, during a speech Tuesday.

"We have allowed color to separate us," he said.

Franklin spoke to students and faculty about racism and Jesus Tuesday at the K-State Union. His speech was a part of the week-long Forum on Jesus.

Franklin said it is very rare to be able to speak about the topic of Jesus in a public institutions.

KSU FORUM ON JESUS

"We can't speak freely about Jesus on campus, but we seem to speak freely about everything else," he said.

Franklin said a lot of students' problems come from spiritual voids in their lives due to an ever-changing world that makes it hard for some students to grow spiritually. He said it is essential that academic institutions talk about the spiritual part of men and women.

Franklin discussed the early beginnings of separation in scripture from the Bible. He said Jesus was a Jew but was not afraid to speak to others who were different than he was.

"You have to go the extra mile and get out of your comfort zone," he said. "Jesus did, and he wasn't afraid to break the rules."

Franklin said we need to do more than just believe in Jesus. We need to get out and do more interacting with people who are different from ourselves, he said.

Franklin said he wants to help people and be the one to offer others a Christ-like vision.

"People need to have hope, comfort and a vision," he said.

Franklin said Kansas is friendly, but the people don't seem to move past awkward situations. People here are comfortable in their environment and aren't willing to put themselves out there to be called different, he said.

"In the South, you know where you stand with people right away," he said. "Here, some people act one way with me when we are in private, but I know that people are sincere when they act the same way to me in public, at church, and stop to have a conversation with me at the grocery store."

Rainy weather hurts 1st day of elections

AMY SIMON
Collegian

The wet, cold weather may have lowered the turnout for the first day of Student Governing Association elections.

Chad Schneiter, Elections Committee chairman, said Tuesday's turnout was less than expected. The unofficial tally showed 1,427 students voted.

"The turnout this year was fairly low, and I think it is due to the weather," Schneiter said.

Class schedules usually make Wednesday a more popular day to vote, Schneiter said.

"Wednesdays are always a better day because there are more classes on campus," he said.

Josh Rohr, freshman in pre-professional health, said the new Scan-TRON system seems to be working fairly well.

"It was confusing at first," he said, "but once you looked at it, they were fairly self-explanatory."

STUDENT ELECTIONS '95

But the new Scan-TRON system was not why students came to vote Tuesday. Several reasons backed their decisions to brave the cold.

Angela Richardson, sophomore in elementary education, said she decided to support Jeff Peterson in the race for student body president.

"I think he did a really good job this year and deserves another year," Richardson said. "I think his best interest is with the students."

Scot Tenpenny, sophomore in accounting, said he decided to support Liz Ring for student body president because he wants change.

"I think they ran a strong campaign, and I think we need someone new in office," Tenpenny said.

Some students came to the polls with concerns about specific issues.

Tony Matthies, senior in construction science, said he supported Jeremy Blair because of his stance against the parking garage.

Jeff Kully, freshman in business administration, said he supported Scott Phillips for president because of his safe-ride program.

Kully said people should take the opportunity to vote and express their opinions.

"I hear a lot of people complain,"

Candidates within budget, try to keep expenses low

CHRISTI WRIGHT

This year, student body presidential candidates spent about $450 to $750, and no one spent more than the $825 limit.

Candidates are required to file expenditure reports with the Elections Committee. The reports include the amounts of money spent on everything in the campaign, including T-shirt screens, signs, banners, Collegian advertisements and buttons.

There is variance in the candidates' expenses on T-shirts. The range in prices is due to the vague regulations, Chad Schneiter, Elections Committee chair, said.

The regulations could be interpreted several different ways, he said.

The presidential duo of Jeremy Blair and Doug Bassett had the lowest expenditure report of all the candidates.

"I think people look at how much was spent in the campaign. I think it shows responsibility in a presidential candidate," Blair said.

Blair and Bassett turned in their expenditure after Friday's deadline.

"We had extraordinary circumstances, so we had to turn our expenditure in late. Our banner was ripped, and we sacrificed the time limit to fix it and record the repair charge in our report," Blair said.

Each candidate took a different approach in preparing for the election. Candidates Jeff Peterson and Brad Finkeldei said they tried a verbal campaign with fewer posters and fliers.

"This year, we didn't put any ads in the paper and had the least amount of signs. We tried to inform everyone through the literature. I think a candidate should win on the issues, not on posters and T-shirts," Peterson said.

Scott Phillips and Patrick Carney said they tried to catch voters' eyes with Elvis and monkey suits, which were inexpensive publicity.

"The Elvis thing was completely free, and the monkey suits were donated by Marie's Costume Shop," Phillips said.

Phillips and Carney also went door to door handing out fliers and answering questions.

Andrew Tomb and Mark Tomb also said they promoted their campaign on a low budget.

"We went knocking on doors and had a benefit concert last Wednesday night. In reality, we had the lowest budget on our campaign because we had to record a

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Campaign expenditure regulations

1. Any expense of money or use of materials, excluding articles of clothing, that is directed by the candidate's campaign for the purpose of a candidate's promotion in an election. Any materials used but not purchased shall be evaluated at fair market value.

2. Articles of clothing bought by the candidate shall be reported as an expense. Articles of clothing bought by supporters are not required to be reported. The screen and the application charge for articles of clothing will be considered a campaign expense.

3. The Kansas State Collegian shall accept advertisements on behalf of the candidate that are first approved by either the candidate or the campaign treasurer. Upon acceptance, the advertisement shall be a campaign expenditure.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ DOLE SCORNS HOLLYWOOD FOR PROMOTING CASUAL SEX, VIOLENCE

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Moving to shore up his conservative credentials, Bob Dole called for voluntary school prayer Tuesday and lashed out at Hollywood for promoting casual violence and even more casual sex.

"We began as a people seeking religious freedom and have evolved into a nation whose government often seems the enemy of religion," the Republican presidential frontrunner said as he campaigned in Ohio and Iowa. "The moral code we nurture in our churches and synagogues is under attack from our government."

Dole's overture to conservatives included tough talk on welfare reform and a promise to phase out federal funding for the arts and humanities, longtime targets of the Christian right. And he accused President Clinton of contributing to the nation's moral decline by abdicating leadership in the war on drugs.

Dole's courting of social conservatives came just a day after he made a gesture to economic conservatives: pledging not to raise income taxes if elected president next year.

Taken together, the remarks underscored Dole's principal goal on his weeklong campaign announcement tour: to cement his position as the front-runner by strengthening his support among the conservative factions ascendant in GOP politics.

▶ ARAFAT AGREES TO MILITANT DISARMING

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Yielding to U.S. and Israeli pressure, Yasser Arafat gave the go-ahead Tuesday for disarming his Muslim opponents despite fears it might unleash a civil war.

Arafat's security forces rounded up dozens more suspected militants, for a two-day total of 150 detentions. A new military tribunal sentenced Omar Shalah, a leader of the Islamic Jihad group, to life in prison for "inciting civil strife."

"I think we are entering a critical stage," Palestinian Justice Minister Freih Abu Medein said of the escalating confrontation between Arafat's government and the opposition.

The crackdown prompted cries of revenge from Hamas and Islamic Jihad, the two groups Arafat targeted after they carried out suicide bombings Sunday.

▶ HEALTH PROGRAM'S RESULTS MIXED

WASHINGTON (AP) — A program to improve Americans' health is making progress against killer diseases but is faltering in caring for the poor, reducing teen pregnancy and promoting exercise.

At the halfway point in a decade-long campaign called Healthy People 2000, federal officials said Tuesday the project is showing mixed results and may require increased efforts to achieve goals set in 1990.

Deaths from heart disease, cancer and stroke are all moving down at a pace that will achieve the target values by 2000, said Dr. J. Michael McGinnis of the U.S. Public Health Service, which is coordinating the program. But the rates of obesity, teen pregnancy, homicides and pneumonia and influenza deaths are actually worse than five years ago.

▶ STATES TRY TO STOP INDIAN-RUN LOTTERY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several states trying to protect millions of dollars in gambling revenue want to stop a nationwide Indian-run lottery. They're pressuring phone companies not to carry calls to the lottery's 800 number.

The National Indian Lottery, announced last month by the Coeur d'Alene tribe of Idaho, is designed to be played with a telephone and a credit card. The states say the lottery is illegal.

AT&T has notified the attorneys general of Connecticut and Minnesota that it won't provide a toll-free phone network for the lottery. Florida and Rhode Island also asked long-distance companies not to serve the lottery. All four states have state-run lotteries.

AT&T and MCI have been negotiating with the tribe to provide the 800 service.

CORRECTIONS

■ On Tuesday's sports page, it was incorrectly reported that Shawn Rhodes, who signed to play basketball at K-State, was from Wichita Northeast High School. Rhodes is actually from Wichita Northwest High School.

■ The name of Jerrod Westfahl, candidate for Agriculture College Council, was misspelled in the voters' guide as Jerrol Westfahl.

■ The name of Donald Beesley, candidate for Student Senate from the College of Agriculture, was misspelled in the voters' guide as Donald Beasley.

■ The wrong photo was used for the mug of Grant Harris, candidate for Student Senate from the College of Arts and Sciences.

■ Carrie Miller, candidate for Student Senate from the College of Business Administration, was mistakenly omitted from the voters' guide.

■ In the voters' guide, Jacob Arnett, candidate for Board of Student Publications, was misidentified as an animal science and industry major. He is a psychology major.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

Play stresses higher ideals

STEPHANIE SWISHER
Collegian

Illusions of grandeur and the American dream face great obstacles in Arthur Miller's drama "All My Sons," which is being performed by the K-State theater department.

The production will have a two-week run, showing at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday and April 19-22 in Nichols Theatre. There will be a matinee at 2 p.m. April 22.

"All My Sons" tells the tragic story of a family caught up in a series of conflicts with responsibility and injustice.

The play was written by the great American classical playwright Arthur Miller said director Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor of speech.

Miller also wrote the American tragedy, "Death of a Salesman."

"This drama is about moral responsibility and the facade of the American dream," MacFarland said.

Eric Stonestreet plays the role of Joe Keller, the central character in the play.

Keller is the owner of an airplane parts plant that sold the Army defective cylinder heads that caused the death of 21 pilots during World War II.

Keller faces a moral dilemma when he lets his innocent partner go to prison for his crimes, Stonestreet said.

"The most important thing to Joe Keller is his kids and his wife, his family," Stonestreet said. "I [Keller] had to make choices of giving my family a good life. I did it for what I believe to be right."

Stonestreet describes "All My Sons" as the American play.

"It's by a Pulitzer-Prize-winning writer, and it would appeal to any generation," Stonestreet said.

At the time the play was written, "All My Sons" took the idea of the perfect American family and exposed it.

"The play was written in 1947 when the American ideal was important to have money, a good business and to care for your family, and that's it," MacFarland said.

McFarland said the play shows there needs to be deeper and higher ideals, and there is a need to think beyond the family and one's own financial well-being.

"Miller sends a very strong message as a playwright," she said. "We are responsible for our own actions morally, and we are responsible for the consequences of the actions," McFarland said.

Marci Maullar, managing director of the K-State Theatre, said the text of "All My Sons" tells the timeless story of self-delusion and dishonesty.

"We justify things for our own personal gain to the extent of letting people die instead of standing up to the reality of the situation," Maullar said.

"It's a very timely play that crosses a lot of barriers, and there is a timeless message in this play," she said.

Maullar said tickets to the production are going fast, so if people are interested in attending the play, they should purchase their tickets soon.

'ALL MY SONS'

Tickets can be purchased for "All My Sons" for $6 for students and senior citizens and $8 for the general public from noon to 5 p.m. at the McCain Box Office. The play will be showing at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday and April 19-22 in Nichols Theatre.

Study shows eating fruits, vegetables might prevent stroke

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A hill of beans may amount to more than you think. The same with a bunch of bananas.

Middle-age men who ate a lot of fruits and vegetables were significantly less likely to suffer strokes during a 20-year period than other men, a study found.

"It was a bit surprising to us how strong (the link) was," said the lead author, Dr. Matthew W. Gillman, assistant professor of ambulatory care and prevention at Harvard Medical School and Harvard Community Health Plan.

"For every increase of three servings of fruits and vegetables per day, there was approximately a 20-percent decrease in the risk of stroke," Gillman said in a telephone interview Monday from Boston.

The findings are published in today's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The results parallel findings reported two years ago among women.

Those who ate lots of spinach, carrots and other vegetables and fruits rich in antioxidant nutrients had a 54-percent lower risk of stroke than other women.

Stroke is the third-leading cause of U.S. deaths, killing about 150,000 of the 500,000 people it strikes a year.

Previous studies have also indicated that people who eat a lot of fruit and vegetables have low rates of cancer, though researchers are not sure if there is a direct link.

Fruits and vegetables also contribute to a high-fiber, low-fat diet, which is strongly associated with heart health.

The new study involved 832 men ages 45 to 65 who were tracked in the Framingham, Mass., Heart Study for two decades.

During the time of the study, 73 men suffered strokes, and 24 others suffered transient ischemic attacks, or mini-strokes.

The researchers calculated differences in stroke risk while accounting for other factors that might have affected the results — differences in blood pressure, cholesterol, smoking habits, alcohol consumption and body fat.

The study did not explore how fruits and vegetables might be protective, but several possibilities have been suggested, including the fact that such foods are rich in antioxidant nutrients, Gillman said.

Antioxidants such as vitamin C and beta carotene help prevent oxidation of "bad" cholesterol.

When bad cholesterol combines with oxygen, it can lodge in arteries and restrict blood flow, causing a heart attack or stroke.

Fruits and vegetables also contain potassium, which has been linked to blood-pressure control.

Another nutrient with suspected stroke-fighting potential is folate, or folic acid.

Low levels of folate are associated with high blood concentrations of an amino acid called homocysteine that contributes to blocked arteries.

Dr. Lewis Kuller, chairman of epidemiology at the University of Pittsburgh School of Public Health, was skeptical of the new research as well as the study among women that found similar results.

"This paper doesn't add much to what really is an unproven hypothesis," Kuller said Tuesday.

Both studies depended on the participants' memory, a notoriously unreliable source of information about diet, Kuller said.

Also, neither really sorts out whether fruits and vegetables are protective or whether some other trait common to people who eat lots of fruits and vegetables really fends off strokes, Kuller said.

The government's Healthy People 2000 program recommends Americans eat at least five servings of fruit and vegetables daily.

However, the Agriculture Department's food pyramid suggests three to five servings of vegetables and two to four of fruit.

Boycott classes, go to Landon Lecture instead

Skipping class now is the only way we'll get excused later.

Once again, many students will not be able to attend the Landon Lecture, because faculty will not excuse interested students.

Student Senate and others have repeatedly requested the administration cancel classes conflicting with the Landon Lectures. These requests have been ignored.

In light of this, we must question the administration's statements that the Landon Lectures are designed to benefit the students. Students cannot benefit from a lecture they cannot attend.

Students ought to have the right to take advantage of the opportunities afforded by these lectures without fear of failing a test or otherwise receiving a low grade.

The administration has refused to guarantee this right because of the lack of student attendance at the lectures. But most students are at present usually unable to attend.

We urge all students to actively voice their desire not to be barred from these opportunities by coming to the Landon Lecture this Thursday, regardless of scheduling conflicts. A lecture series with as much potential value as the Landon Lectures must not be withheld from those who stand to gain the most from it.

Only by attending in force can we stress to the administration that we value our academic freedom highly enough to break the rules keeping us from it.

Forum doesn't represent all Christians

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

"Beware of practicing your piety before men in order to be seen by them; for then you will have no reward from your Father who is in heaven." — Matthew 6:1

The KSU Forum on Jesus is running all this week to try to raise awareness on campus about the person of Jesus. It looks like the K-State community is about to be spoon-fed more ideology from the right wing of the church instead of the truth.

A bunch of people are getting together to publicly display their piety.

Why weren't the resources going into this Holy Week crusade used for something besides events that mainly Christians will be interested in? Church is the place to preach to Christians; college is the place to teach everyone.

It's doubtful that most agnostics and non-Christians would care to hear a serialized lecture series on "Is Jesus the Christ?" given by Christians when it's a foregone conclusion that, judging by who the sponsors of the event are, the answer will be yes.

There are plenty of other topics to discuss that were overlooked in favor of the parochial, comfortable, conservative agenda being served up.

Events not included in the KSU Forum on Jesus are a panel of Roman Catholics, Protestants, Orthodoxes, Mormons, Jehovah's Witnesses and Christ Scientists discussing the challenges to and for Christianity in the next 1,000 years; a film or lecture documenting or denying the possibility that Jesus spent some or part of the 18 years of his life that are missing from the Bible in the Indian subcontinent; a dramatic production throughout Holy Week portraying Jesus' entrance into Jerusalem, his trial, execution and resurrection.

Those in charge of the KSU Forum on Jesus seem to be concerned about raising awareness about Jesus to a level at which they are all comfortable. After all, it's a lot easier to discuss topics that Christians already know and non-Christians don't believe than to do something more challenging. Such a challenge might interfere with the displays of public piety.

Today's discussion is from noon to 1 p.m. in Union 212, titled "The Challenges of Being a Follower of Christ in the Media." Carol Pardun, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications; John Niebergall, distinguished professor of journalism and mass communications; and Paul Parsons, professor of journalism and mass communications, will be expressing their life experiences as people of faith in the media. The campus can look forward to their interesting anecdotes and insights.

Unfortunately, one of the organizers and members of the media speaking at this event is John Hart. With all due respect to his talents as a print journalist, Hart does not speak for this Christian who has worked in college print and college, commercial, and public broadcast media.

Hart advocates making Christian beliefs — or, rather, his beliefs — into public policy yet contradicts the very Bible he claims is his source of guidance. For example, Hart said he believes it is Christian to advocate and enforce the death penalty. Jesus had very different views on the death penalty than Hart:

"But I say to you, do not resist one who is evil. But if any one strikes you on the right cheek, turn to him the other also." — Matthew 5:39

When Jesus came upon a woman about to be executed, he said, "And as they continued to ask him, he stood up and said to them, 'Let him who is without sin among you be the first to throw a stone at her.'" — John 8:7

Of course this begs the question, "Who is Jesus to disagree with John Hart?"

It goes to show that if you talk about a subject long enough — in Hart's case, Christianity — people eventually begin to think you know what you're talking about.

It looks like the K-State community is about to be spoon-fed more ideology from the right wing of the church instead of the truth.

Jesus knew about political leaders who sought to instill their non-scriptural ideas as holy laws. He addressed them as well:

"And he said to them, 'Well did Isaiah prophesy of you hypocrites, as it is written, "This people honors me with their lips, but their heart is far from me; in vain do they worship me, teaching as doctrines the precepts of men." You leave the commandment of God, and hold fast the tradition of men.' And he said to them, 'You have a fine way of rejecting the commandment of God, in order to keep your tradition!'"— Mark 7:6-10

It would be good to remember these words in time when religious extremists are running for office by blaspheming the Word of God. Some people forget that the reason why Jesus was so important 2,000 years ago was that he was relevant to people of so many backgrounds. He is now, too, but unfortunately his most public followers are out of touch with him as well as those outside their scope.

Jesus said there were only two great commandments of the law: loving your Lord your God with all your heart, all your soul, and all your mind, and loving your neighbor as you love yourself. If you do both of these, you are on the road to Christianity. If not, no matter what you call yourself, you're not.

Have a Happy Easter, and may God continue to bless you all.

Scott Allen Miller is a junior in interdisciplinary social sciences.

Country needs better ways to deal with drug problems

Earlier this month, the state of Kansas voted to allow the legal possession of marijuana for medicinal purposes.

I see this as a step in America's attitude toward legalizing drugs.

Prompted by this decision and a special on television last Thursday called "America's War on Drugs," which presented different drug treatment methods in the Netherlands and in Great Britain as compared with the United States, I can honestly say that I think drugs should be regulated in the United States.

When I looked at the U.S. drug policy and the way we handle addicts, I was embarrassed. Most of Europe and Australia have decided that there is no such thing as a drug-free society.

In light of that, they have decided to experiment in ways the U.S. government would never dream of doing.

They have needle-exchange programs, which have helped drive down the spread of AIDS.

Methadone, a synthetic drug that stops heroin-withdrawal symptoms without giving a high — much like nicotine gum for smokers — is being used to help heroin addicts.

The Netherlands have outlawed "hard drugs" such as cocaine and heroin while "soft drugs" like marijuana and cannabis have been legalized.

Heroin addicts can go to doctors and receive a prescription for methadone that will allow them to have a job and function in society.

Compare all this with the U.S. policy of throwing first-time offenders in prison with little, if any, form of treatment.

Nearly 30 percent of inmates in state and federal prisons are there for drug-related incidents. Obviously, building more prisons doesn't seem to be the answer.

I believe the answer lies in treatment and regulation. Treating drug addicts as less than human doesn't help anyone. The addict doesn't believe that he or she is worth help, and society loses a potentially productive member.

Throwing someone in jail for life on a first offense, (a law Michigan has on its books), is denying individuals the chance to start over before they're in too deep.

To the credit of the current government, Clinton asked for $355 million dollars to treat hard-core drug users. Congress cut him back to $57 million.

Controlling the drugs seems to be the most realistic answer.

The British have found that pure heroin in a regulated amount is safe and nonlethal.

Street heroin, on the other hand, can be very dangerous and potentially deadly.

By providing safe drugs, addicts can have a job and work on breaking their habit.

Contrary to most lawmakers' gut responses, legalizing drugs won't inspire everyone in the country to use them all the time.

Nicotine and alcohol have been legalized for years, and we have yet to all get drunk on the same weekend. Besides, numerous studies have shown that nicotine is far more addictive than heroin.

In the United States, New York and Baltimore have tried some alternative methods to controlling their drug problems.

New York had a needle-exchange program that allowed drug users to bring in their old needles and trade them for clean ones.

The spread of HIV dropped from 6 percent to 2 percent. Baltimore had a methadone maintains program that also showed success.

The United States, however has yet to try anything that doesn't involve more police.

In the 1970s then- President Richard Nixon appointed a committee called the Shaffer Commission to study the effects of marijuana. The Commission found that marijuana should be made legal. The report was ignored for the most part.

California has chosen to legalize marijuana in small doses. If they catch you carrying or selling it on the street, chances are you'll be arrested, but having a small amount in your home is no longer an offense.

The police estimate they have saved at least a billion dollars in manpower and legal costs.

Basically, what it comes down to is that the old methods have had their chance. The time has come to try something new, by having a few drugs legalized and the rest regulated, so abuse won't be nearly as frequent.

The price will go down, and those who want help will be able to get it without risk of arrest.

Kansas has made the first step.

Maybe the nation can make a few more.

▶ META-'ZINE

Censorship isn't deserved

Dear editor,

Thank you for the coverage of a $150 allocations bill for Meta-'zine, which was rejected in Student Senate after proceedings, which almost everyone now admits contained some out-of-line, prejudicial or misleading arguments.

Had the incident passed without any protest, the precedent would not have been a good one. Since the bill only allocated a little funding needed to complete a very difficult publication project (the fine art side which had already been reviewed and given much more substantial backing from the Fine Arts Council), I was surprised to learn from a front-page article that it created an issue in Student Senate.

Some people may think that we at Meta-'zine are just lucky that we suffered a sensational and much publicized attack, which may interest many people in our little 'zine-style anthology. But now the weakening of anti-censorship safeguards in Student Governing Association guidelines (perhaps as a result of some innocent oversight while the guidelines were being thoroughly revised) have given independent-minded student groups reason to be concerned about censorship by defunding in the future.

And all around the United States, censorship issues are big and getting bigger as more and more books are banished from public school libraries and so on. It's a fitting occasion to discuss freedom of expression and the forces that oppose it, some of which are simply to thoughtless.

It may seem out of proportion to make a big deal out of the small folly on the part of a few senators who ventured judgments far outside their fields of competence and expertise. I could easily say something just as misguided if I got into talking about something I haven't bothered to learn much about, such as managing a beef-packing plant.

People who have studied literature and other fine arts in any depths are well aware that you can't judge a publication on the basis of scandalous bits and pieces pulled out of context.

There certainly are disturbing passages to be found in the works of Shakespeare, Hemingway or the recent Nobel Prize winners Toni Morrison and Kenzaburo Oe. Knowing that writers and artists who refuse to handle controversial material could end up doing insignificant hack work for Hallmark Greeting Cards, we chose "Passages in the Empire of Chaos" as our guiding theme.

I confess to having a place for a satirical feminist poem, which touched on the familiar phenomena of unsavory male characters who can all too credibly be imagined trying to seduce any 16-year-old in sight. In a way, I am flattered that the senators recognized some disturbing passages because the publication could not possibly been of any importance if it didn't deal with some unsettling realities and place them in a new context that we hope readers will find enlightening.

There is another mistake in making rash decisions based self-righteous responses to graphic material: It is presumed that one's feelings of shock toward certain aspects of experience have some kind of direct ethical significance, which is very far from being true. If it was true, people who had been through emergency medical training or have gone to med school would not only be the folks with the strongest stomachs, but the most of evil of people, die-hard menaces to humanity.

When we pretend there is only one simple relationship between feelings and the complex problems in real human experience, we play a misleading game and may even fool ourselves.

"We hope the debate will now move on to larger questions, such as how to strenghten the SGA's safeguards for freedom of expression."

DAVID KROMM
senior in secondary education

Such misguided attitudes encourage censorship — information can be suppressed simply because it bothers some people or because they can't appreciate the way it is handled in an artistic composition. Even minor incidents of censorship can trigger strong responses from people concerned enough to learn from history; for it was a part of a pattern of Fascism, the disastrous response of many Europeans to social and economic dislocations, which bear some resemblance to the problems of the world today.

Other parts of the Fascist reaction pattern are also visible today: an exaggerated militarism entirely out of proportion to any real security threats, increased incidents of racism, scape-goating and xenophobia and a failure of national political leaders to deal with real social problems honestly and effectively or to check the powerful tide of narrow-mindedness and paranoia. In such circumstances, any authentic expressive artist can come under fire from some directions, while from others, people see an "evil precedent."

Of course, such problems have a relevant history that goes back further than the memorable catastrophes of half a century back. Oppressive and destructive conflicts between various self-righteous religious sects form a historical background, which broadly educated men like Thomas Jefferson when they put safeguards against censorship and other forms of repression at the very core of U.S. law.

Effective safeguards should also exist elsewhere (SGA guidelines for instance) and attempts to weaken or disregard such safeguards should be viperously debated, which is why we filed a complaint with the SGA Attorney General concerning the Senate's handling of our bill. We hope the debate will now move on to larger questions, such as how to strengthen the SGA's safeguards for freedom of expression.

We also hope some of you send us writing and pictures that will help future publications resound with even more shockingly significant views of contemporary life than we've figured out how to handle so far. There will be no solutions in our culture until people create ways to face up to (instead of suppressing) the intricate problems in our experience.

Drivin' dry

Story and photos by Cary Conover

Sandie Durflinger, senior in life sciences and pre-pharmacy, gets a lift from Suzi Goble, junior in human resource management, Friday evening in Aggieville. Durflinger called for a ride because she lost track of the people she went out with.

Every Friday and Saturday night of the school year, there are Alpha Delta Pi sorority members making sure their sorority sisters don't get a chance to drive drunk.

It's called ADPi Dry.

"It's for anything. If they're by themselves or left somewhere. If they feel unsafe, or if they're in a bar. We encourage them not to walk home," said Kelly McGlinn, freshman in speech pathology and audiology.

ADPi Dry is run on a strictly volunteer basis.

"They're willing to donate their time and gas, so it doesn't cost the house anything," McGlinn said.

Carolyn Cormaci, senior in bakery science and management, came up with the idea almost two years ago when she was social chair of the house.

She saw that many fraternities at K-State had successful anti-drunken driving programs. One of her friends from high school said her sorority at the University of Kansas had a program, so Cormaci decided to plan one here.

The sorority voted to initiate the program.

The program has been successful and has become a part of each newly elected social chair's duties.

Jessica Arnett, ADPi social chair, said much of the program's success is because of the sorority members' feelings of duty and responsibility.

"I rarely have any problems with people not showing up," Arnett said.

Cormaci said there are things she would do to improve ADPi Dry, such as getting beepers for the women who work. She said this would prevent them from having to wait by the phone all night.

But she said her ideas were nothing that couldn't wait.

"Nothing's broken, so we're not going to fix it," she said.

The program involves three sorority members who work between 10:30 p.m. and 2:30 a.m. Friday and Saturday nights.

Karen Way, senior in biology, said the scheduling of ADPi Dry was never a problem. She said there was always somebody willing to work a different shift if need be.

"It's really flexible. You can trade with people," she said.

McGlinn worked last Friday because she was filling in for someone who was sick.

"Originally, I was scheduled to do it in February with my diamond sister and another girl, but ours got called off because we had a date party that night," McGlinn said.

The ADPis don't have pledge mothers in their sorority. Instead they have what are called diamond sisters, which are usually selected during ADPi Dry.

"When we have date parties or dances, we have DDs from fraternities that drive us, so we cancel ADPi Dry because it's not fair to tell them they can't go," McGlinn said.

Getting to know people wasn't the only benefit of working an ADPi Dry shift.

Waiting for the phone to ring on Friday and Saturday nights is a good opportunity for the women to catch up on homework.

Way said even though sorority members don't get overly excited when it's their turn to work, the benefits usually outweigh the costs.

"You only have to do it once a year, and you can use it all the other weekends. It's not a bad deal," Way said.

When two people are out driving, the third person always stays at home to answer the phone.

There are always enough cars to drive, ready to pick up or take someone to or from almost anywhere, she said.

"We'll pick them up anywhere, as long as they're not out in Ogden," Way said.

Sandie Durflinger, senior in life sciences and pre-pharmacy, was picked up in Aggieville by Suzi Goble, junior in human resource management, Friday night.

Durflinger said she would never be ashamed or embarrassed about calling for a ride.

"That's what ADPi Dry is about. That's why I did it for my night, so that I could call whenever I want to," she said.

While waiting for the phone to ring, Karen Way, senior in biology, watches television on the first floor of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority house. The women who worked ADPi Dry also found their shifts to be a good time to do homework.

BRIEFS & NOTES

RECRUITS on display

KU's Allen Fieldhouse will play host to the Converse All-America Basketball game April 22.

The game features eight recruits representing Big Eight Conference schools.

This includes Manny Dies, a 6-foot-7 forward from Wichita South High School, who will be the Wildcat's only entry.

The Big Eight recruits plus a recruit from Texas will make up the team from the future Big Twelve schools. It will play another team of nine recruits from around the nation.

The team that will oppose the Big Twelve team will be made up of recruits from the Pacific Ten Conference, Big Ten Conference, the Southwest Conference and the Missouri Valley Conference.

The doors will open to the public at 6 p.m., and a slam-dunk and three-point contest will be at 7.

Tickets are available for $12 for adults and $6 for students.

Requests should be made through the KU ticket office at 1-800-34-HAWKS.

After the game, the players will sign autographs on souvenir T-shirts. The autograph session will last for 45 minutes.

YOUNG down to last cut

K-State sophomore Yolanda Young made it through the final cut at the Olympic Festival Volleyball Team tryouts in Austin, Texas.

Young was among 18 players to make the final cut in Austin. The 18 players were selected from each of the four sites for a final draw to see who will make the Olympic Festival squad.

Final selections will be made later this month using videotape taken during the tryouts and individual statistics.

Final selections will form the Olympic Festival squad and alternates.

- The K-State volleyball team has also been in action over the past two weeks.

The Cats won its first tournament of the spring, which the Cats hosted at Ahearn Fieldhouse.

Then K-State played in a tournament this past weekend in Lincoln, Neb. In the tournament the Cats faced Iowa State, Nebraska, Kansas and Nebraska at Omaha.

JEREMY CRABTREE

KOEMAN grabs award

For the second time this season, a K-State baseball player has been honored by the Big Eight Conference.

Junior pitcher Matt Koeman was named the Big Eight Pitcher of the Week in Tuesday's announcement from the league office.

Koeman got the attention of conference officials after pitching two victories against Creighton and throwing a two-hitter while striking out 11 in the Wildcats' 7-1 win against defending national champion Oklahoma.

Koeman's record is 3-1 on the year, and he has struck out 29 batters so far this season. Koeman is the second Cats pitcher to receive the honor this year.

Jack Witt was recognized for his performance during the week of March 20.

DEDICATION

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Travis Livingston has re-dedicated himself to the hurdles.

His first two years at K-State, Livingston combined football with track and field, until this year, when he decided to put all of his efforts into hurdles.

ONE on ONE

"I miss football in the way I miss the sports I gave up in high school," Livingston said. "I just think what might have happened if I kept playing. I don't regret my decision, but if I did, I wouldn't admit it."

As a multi-sport athlete in high school, Livingston said he has made this type of decision before.

Livingston was wide receiver for the Wildcats, but after considering the time it took to compete in two sports, he decided he wanted to put his name on the map in track and field.

Competing in both sports left little time for anything else, Livingston said.

"It seemed like everything in my life was scheduled," Livingston said. "If I had some free time, all I did was sleep."

After ending his football career, Livingston said he is excited to run in his first full outdoor season.

"This is my first year to run outdoor in college," Livingston said. "Last year, I ran at one meet early in the season and then the Big Eight Championships where I got fourth. I wasn't able to do as much as I wanted."

He did plenty early in his career as a member of the K-State track team.

As a freshman in 1993, he captured first in the 55-meter hurdles at the Big Eight Indoor Championships with a time of 7.34.

However, with early success comes early pressure, Livingston said.

"I won when I was a freshman," Livingston said. "Now if I get second to one of those guys it's hard to take, because I've beat some of those guys before — why didn't I beat them again?"

This season, Livingston appeared to be headed for a win in the 55-meter hurdles at the Big Eight Championships when he stumbled over the last hurdle, giving two other runners just enough advantage to pass him.

"I was real disappointed," Livingston said. "I wanted to bring it back to K-State, but one mistake can kill you in that race."

A similar stroke of bad luck hit Livingston at the Texas State High School Championships.

Livingston was supposed to run his hurdle race at 8 a.m., but a downpour postponed the event. After sitting through the storm all day, he finally ran at 12:30 a.m., still in the rain.

To make matters worse, he missed his senior prom and finished second to a runner he beat on numerous occasions earlier in the season.

"I didn't lose a meet in high school until the state meet," Livingston said. "That was probably the weirdest moment in my career."

This season, Livingston's times are coming down. At the beginning of the season, his best time stood at 14.25.

At the Southwest Texas Invitational, he was clocked at 14.17. On April 1 at the KSU Open, he came through with a time of 14.21.

"I hope by mid-season I'll be back down to where I can qualify automatically," Livingston said.

If Livingston wants to meet the provisional mark, he will have to lower his time to 14.04. During his high-school career, Livingston recorded a personal-best time of 13.6.

Despite his disappointment at the state meet, Livingston took first at the Texas Relays during his senior season.

"That was a big win," Livingston said. "After I won that race, that's when the recruiters really started coming in."

Although he has practiced track since September, he said he is still adjusting.

"The workouts are just different," Livingston said. "I'm confident I can qualify for nationals this year, but I think my best will come sometime next year.

"I want to have a shot at a national title."

Golf squads prepare for tourney

BERNIE HANEY
Collegian

The men's and women's golf teams are wrapping up another year of play.

After a good fall season and an opening first-place finish to start the spring season, the men's golf team has struggled in its last two tournaments.

A sixth-place finish at the Southwest Missouri State Invitational and an eighth-place finish at the Diet Pepsi/Shocker Classic has the squad worried about making the NCAA Central Regionals.

K-State Golf Coach Mark Elliott said they need to beat either Iowa State or Nebraska in the last two tournaments to jump into the final spot for regional action in Houston, Texas.

"If we can survive and play decent the last two tournaments — at least make it interesting for regionals," Elliott said.

Elliott said the team is having trouble coming up with three solid rounds of play.

"We are having two out of three rounds comparable with the field and one round that is just killing us," Elliott said.

The team just finished up the Bent Brook/Blazer Invitational Tuesday, and Scott Hovis was in sixth place.

The next tournament for the men's squad is the Big Eight Championships April 24-25 at Prairie Dunes Country Club in Wichita.

Elliott, in his fourth year as head coach, said the team has placed sixth, seventh and sixth at the Big Eight tournament in the last three years under his coaching duties.

"The 16 years previous to that, we were last," Elliott said. "So that broke a 16-year run of last-place finishes in the Big Eight Tournament."

Elliott said the Big Eight's field this year is balanced, excluding Oklahoma State, who is leaps and bounds above everybody.

"Really, three through eight is up for grabs, and any of those teams can finish third, or any of the teams can finish eighth," Elliott said. "So it's really kind of scary."

All of the team members will be back next year, but Elliott said he wants to continue this year with post-season tournaments.

Wentland breaks record with personal best jump

The Texas Relays, although a disappointment for some, was a success for Gwen Wentland.

The Wildcats traveled to Austin, Texas, for the meet, which took place Friday and Saturday.

Gwen Wentland brought home first place in the high jump.

Thirty-six competitors were shooting for the title that Wentland captured with a leap of 6 feet 4 inches.

The leap equaled her best performance of the outdoor season and set a new Texas Relays record.

"My legs were pretty sore because I've been training so hard the last few weeks," Wentland said.

"Normally, I wouldn't like to compete in a meet with so many people, but this time, I think it helped because it gave me extra time to stretch."

Big Eight Indoor Champion Ed Broxterman did not place in high jump. He cleared a bar of 7'3/4" at the meet.

"It wasn't a good day for me," Broxterman said. "The Asbury looking to rebuild with strong recruiting class

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

Starting today, K-State coach Tom Asbury and his staff will be looking to fill some holes in their basketball program left by graduation.

And the Wildcats are already on the road to recovery.

Earlier, during the fall signing period, K-State received three commitments to its program.

Manny Dies, a 6-foot-8, 230-pound forward out of Wichita South High School; Shawn Rhodes, a 6-foot-10, 220-pound center from Wichita Northwes High School; and Johnnie Williams, 6-foot-9, 245-pound forward from Cloud County Community College, all signed letters of intent to the basketball program last fall.

With those players already signed, the Cats will be looking to fill the two remaining scholarships during the spring signing period.

One of those slots is expected to be filled by Anton Hubert, who is a 6-foot guard from McPherson Community Central College. At McPherson, he averaged 22.4 points a game, which included hitting 45 percent from three-point range and a total of 69 assists for the season.

McPherson coach Mike Beard said he expects Hubert to sign with K-State today.

"It is about as sure of a thing as you can possibly get," Beard said.

Beard said Hubert is an athletic player who has the ability to hit the jump shot or drive around defenders to the basket.

"He is very athletic, very quick, and he shoots it very well," Beard said. "He has proved himself as a true scorer."

Last season, Hubert scored 31 points against both Hutchinson Community College and Independence Community College, which gives Beard a reason to think Hubert has what it takes to play at a division I-A level.

"He is the kind of player who rises to the occasion," Beard said.

Hubert was also recruited by Wake Forest, Iowa State, Washington State, Minnesota, Hawaii and Creighton. He only made visits to the campuses of Creighton and K-State.

Another possible recruit is Gerald Eaker, who is a 6-foot-11, 230-pound center from Southeastern Community College in Burlington, Iowa.

Eaker originally signed with Ohio State before transferring to Southeastern Community College.

Eaker, who went to the same high school as Isiah Thomas (St. Joseph's in Chicago), averaged 15.1 points, 5.8 rebounds and 4.2 blocks a game last year and shot 63 percent from the floor.

Schools that are also interested in Eaker are Kentucky, Alabama Birmingham and West Virginia.

K-State has also been in contact with the following players:

■ Sharif Butler, a 6-foot-2 guard from Gulf Coast Community College who averaged more than 20 points a game last season. Butler is also interested in Oklahoma and Texas Christian.

■ Bobby Jackson, a 6-foot-1 guard from Nebraska Western Community College. Jackson averaged 16 points a game last season. He is also interested in Arizona.

Post player on the top of the Cats' wish list

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

As the spring signing period begins today, K-State women's basketball coach Brian Agler will be looking to add more names to the K-State roster.

The Wildcats are looking to fill holes left by seniors Shanele Stires and Shawnda DeCamp while adding depth across the line.

At the post, the Cats have their eye on Kari Willingham, a 6-foot-2 senior at Perkins High School in Oklahoma.

Carrie Ragar, a 6' sophomore at Moberly Community College in Missouri, is another K-State recruit.

Willingham averaged 27.9 points and 2.3 rebounds as a senior, leading to her selection to the all-state team.

Though she played six-on-six in high school, Perkins coach Jim Burnett said he feels like she will be able to make the adjustment to the college game quickly.

"She has been playing AAU ball, and that should help her," Burnett said. "She will still need to adjust to the physical play in the Big Eight, but she's got great quickness and runs the floor well."

Ragar averaged 23.7 points and 11.6 rebounds as a sophomore, earning her a second-team all-America selection.

"Carrie is a very good scorer inside and can step out to the high post and shoot the 15-footer," Moberly coach Kevin Fricke said. "She is a strong inside player."

Ragar's 11.6 rebound-per-game average set a new school record at Moberly, and she tied the single-game record with 23.

At the wing position, another Moberly sophomore is considering K-State.

Jamie Koester averaged 19.1 points and 7.2 rebounds last season. At 5'11", She provides a threat both inside and from the perimeter, on offense and defense. Koester shot 49 percent from the three-point line, while blocking 54 shots on the season.

"Jaime shoots the ball very well, and she gets to the basket quick," Fricke said.

At the guard spot, Shelly Jackson, a 5'9" senior from Ardmore High School in Oklahoma, will visit K-State this weekend before making a decision. Jackson averaged 20.7 points, 6.8 rebounds and 3.1 steals per game in her senior season.

"Shelly will probably play a two-guard in college," Ardmore coach Cliff Cotton said. "Her range goes out to the three-point arc, and she can take it on the block."

In addition to the spring recruits, Agler signed sophomore post Kayla Hester from Seward County Community College in Liberal and senior wing Jenny Coalson from Ellicott High School in Calhan, Colo.

crowd and the meet was great, but I just didn't jump very well. I don't know what went wrong."

Because of the size of the meet, the athletes competing were forced to wait extended periods of time before competing.

"I got down to the pit at about 1 o'clock and finished jumping about 4:30," Broxterman said.

"That was only about five or six jumps.

"With that many good people, I don't mind the competition, and it was a lot of fun to be there, but I don't really like competing against so many people."

Other athletes experienced a run of bad luck at the meet, as well.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said Karissa Owens slightly strained her hamstring while running her leg of the 1,600-meter relay and could not finish.

Travis Livingston fell during the 110-meter hurdles and failed to complete his race.

It was the first time Livingston failed to finish a 110-meter hurdle race in his career — high school or college.

However, the women's sprint-medley relay did finish its race, placing fourth with a time of 3:49.79.

"I think some of these meets are becoming really archaic," Rovelto said.

"It's a good experience for the kids to come to something like this, but if you take a large number of athletes from our team there, I don't think you can say that your team has gotten better by going to these things."

Wentland cleared 6'4" earlier this season at the College Station Relays at Texas A&M while competing in the heptathlon.

Her effort tied Olympic gold medalist Jackie Joyner-Kersee's American record for the high jump while competing in the heptathlon.

Wentland said she plans to train hard and compete less during April.

"I'm not competing next weekend at Oklahoma, and I'm just going to long jump at the KU Relays," Wentland said.

"I'm going to train hard for the rest of April and lay off competing so much. I have a pretty busy month in May, and I don't want to get tired."

Wanita Dykstra and Jill Montgomery finished fourth and seventh in the high jump, each with a clearance of 5'9-3/4". Kristen and Kirsten Schultz placed seventh and 10th in the javelin at the meet with tosses of 156' and 149'2", respectively.

K-State will travel to Norman, Okla., Saturday for the John Jacobs Invitational at Oklahoma University.

"I'm going to train hard for the rest of April and lay off competing so much. I have a pretty busy month in May, and I don't want to get tired."

Cats improve as season moves along

"I think it's a good group," Elliott said. "I'm looking forward to next year, but I'm still looking forward to this year."

In the history of K-State golf, the men's team has only made the NCAA Central Regional tournament once.

That was two years ago under Elliott's tutelage.

The women's team doesn't have a chance for post-season play, but it can finish with a bang at the Big Eight Tournament.

The women's Big Eight finale is being played at Stillwater Country Club in Oklahoma on April 24-25.

The best finish for the women's team in the spring season is a third-place finish at the Southwest Missouri State Invitational.

Elliott said the women's team thinks too much when its on the golf course.

"Those girls are smart. Maybe they're too smart to play golf is their problem," Elliott said.

"They get to thinking too much out there. They're too smart for their own good."

Elliott said their season has been up and down, but he thinks they are improving.

"I think they're getting better," Elliott said. "They're not very far away from being a pretty solid team. They just need to put all their good scores together at the same time."

The women's team has been led in the spring by senior Jacque Wright, who has posted two top-10 finishes and a 16th-place finish in three tournaments.

Elliott said the team members have been having a difficult time when they play a few bad holes.

"I think they try to do too much when they start playing bad or they get real scared and tentative," Elliott said. "They just need to keep on going."

K-State vs. Kansas.

Enough said.

The Sunflower Showdown, tennis style, has plenty of hype coming into today's Big Eight Conference match-up.

KU comes into Manhattan with an overall mark of 11-11 and a No. 33 ranking in the country.

Despite a three-match losing streak, the Wildcats hope to upset the nationally ranked Jayhawks.

The Cats enter with a 7-9 record, 1-3 in conference play.

The match-up with Kansas comes after the Cats suffered a disappointing 5-4 home loss to Colorado.

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau said he hopes the meeting with Kansas will bring some better play out of his players.

"Basically, we have not sustained the kind of effort we have to sustain to do well as a team," Bietau said.

"It's a little surprising that we're still dealing with that kind of issue at this time of the year. It is a very big issue.

"We fight to get out of trouble most of the time. The sustaining part is just not happening."

The K-State/KU rivalry heats up at the start of play, as two of the nations best will go at it.

In No. 1 singles, two nationally ranked opponents get their shot at moving up in the Rolex Collegiate Rankings.

Wildcat all-America Karina Kuregian, No. 13 in the singles poll, faces No. 9 Nora Koves, 16-6, in the opener.

Kuregian, 24-5, looks to extend her consecutive string of victories to 11.

Later in the day, Kuregian, the only Big Eight player ranked in both the singles and doubles polls, pairs up with Martine Shrubsole in No. 1 doubles.

The No. 14-ranked team of Kuregian and Shrubsole, 16-2, has claimed wins in two straight matches and 12 of its last 13 tries.

The duo is one of two Big Eight doubles teams in the national rankings.

Bietau said depth could play a role in the Kansas match.

"We have to remember that we are not a deep team," he said.

"For our team, there is not that high level of expectation to win. Kansas is a tough team.

"We have to keep dealing with our own team's strengths and weaknesses. I hope we can give them a good match," Bietau said.

Weather permitting, the match will be played at 2 p.m. today at the L.P. Washburn Tennis Complex.

After Kansas, the Cats will travel to both Iowa State and Nebraska for matches.

Cats drop 3 in a row to OU

NICOLE POELL

The K-State baseball team was hoping to carry some momentum of a four-game winning streak into a weekend series against Oklahoma.

But that momentum ran out as K-State dropped all three games against the Sooners, falling to 4-8 in conference play.

Sooner ace Mark Redman shut down the Cats in Friday night's action, striking out a career-high 13 batters in OU's 6-1 victory.

Saturday's game saw the Cats at least get some runs on the board, but they still fell short in the 10-7 loss.

The Sooners struck early, going up 2-0 on a two-run homer in the first inning.

They tacked on another run when M.J. Mariani doubled in Bobby Brown.

But the Cats came back in the third, scoring four runs on just three hits.

With OU up 6-4 going into seventh inning, three K-State errors allowed the Sooners to score four more runs.

The Cats pulled within three in a ninth-inning rally but couldn't do any more as they recorded their second-straight loss.

The K-State offense had just two hits in Sunday's 7-3 loss. Pitcher Jon Oiseth fell to 0-3.

School districts report positively about QPA

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The state Board of Education, weary of hearing criticism of its quality performance accreditation system initiated four years ago, finally heard some good news.

Spokesmen for the El Dorado and Hesston school districts, who are completing their fourth year in the controversial school accreditation program, made presentations to the board at its monthly meeting on Tuesday. They said it is working well and improving student performance.

The board likely will make some modifications in QPA at its June meeting.

The state board has been besieged with complaints from some parents, teachers and school districts who don't like it.

They complain about the outcomes, or goals, required under the system — begun as pilot programs in 48 of the state's 304 districts in the 1991-92 school year. They also complain about the amount of paperwork required and the time spent on giving tests.

Parent criticism has focused on a student outcome relating to "emotional and physical well-being." Some say that gives schools license to teach values and sex education, topics they believe are better left to home and church.

QPA was created to bring accountability to schools' performance in educating children. Schools are required to establish goals — outcomes — and are accredited on the basis of how well they progress toward attaining those goals.

Previously, they were accredited only on the basis of facilities and equipment.

While the Legislature argues over what changes it would like to see made in QPA, the board is preparing to make modifications at its June meeting.

A House-Senate conference committee failed last Friday, as the Legislature took first adjournment, to reach agreement on a bill that would change the wording in a 1992 statute that put the state board's QPA system into law.

The Legislature cannot order the changes because under the state constitution, all policy for elementary and secondary education is vested in the state board. However, because the Legislature controls educational funding, the board listens to legislative desires.

Moore Hall adds leadership wing

CARY CONOVER
Collegian

Residents of Moore Hall are participating in a first-time experiment on the hall's first floor.

The experiment will establish a Moore Hall Leadership Wing for men living in the hall who have shown special leadership and academic abilities.

The wing, which occupies the hall's B-wing, will require certain criteria of its residents.

These include a minimum grade point average of 2.5, an encouragement to be involved with campus-wide activities and participation in three programs each semester.

Some of the programs they have participated in during past semesters are canned-food drives and the Adopt-a-Family program.

Eric Keen, junior in mechanical engineering, said a key requirement for any incoming student is an attitude for leadership.

This is something potential members of the leadership wing will be required to have.

The concept behind the scholarship wing was to have a wing without a resident assistant.

The wing is currently in its first semester without a RA.

The idea for the scholarship wing came from students.

"It was initially the students' idea to not have a staff member," Keen said.

Continuing next semester, the wing will be without an RA. Hall director Bridget Porter will act as a wing adviser.

Keen said the residents have many things in common, but all are involved with the campus.

"Our wing has shown a tendency toward leadership. We're all very involved in the campus," he said.

The wing will consist mainly of returning students.

"We'd prefer that they're returning students or students that have been here one semester," Keen said.

The high retention rate of students returning to the wing was one reason the students are so tight-knit, Porter said.

"It's really a reward for returning students," Porter said.

Brent Perkins, freshman in architectural engineering and Moore Hall representative to Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, said he was planning to come back to the wing in the fall as a sophomore.

"I'm looking forward to it. We've got a lot of good guys coming back," he said.

Perkins wasn't sure about his long-term plans of staying in Moore. He said he was thinking about moving into an apartment his junior year.

If he did move into an apartment, he said it would be with one of the current residents of the B-wing.

Keen said the leadership wing will be similar to Smurthwaite House.

"We still have to live under the rules and regulations of Moore Hall, but overall, the goals will be the same," he said.

Porter said the students on the wing not only were well-disciplined and self-motivated, but the high leadership standards were apparent in everything they did.

"This is a wing that has demonstrated a lot of leadership," she said.

Porter said the students created the proposal and redrafted it several times until it was something that could be agreed on by all.

"This is really something these people have earned," she said.

Studying ABROAD

ISEP offers exchange programs to 34 locations

MARY EMERSON
Collegian

Imagine traveling around the world and not having to skip a semester of school or studying on a beach or learning a new language without sitting in a lab.

The Kansas State University Study Abroad programs can make it all a possibility.

Study Abroad is responsible for sending students from K-State to other countries and bringing students here from other countries.

"Our philosophy is that our world is getting smaller. We need to internationalize the campus and community," Vernon Larson Jr., acting director of Study Abroad, said.

■ There are several programs within the Study Abroad program.

The largest is the International Student Exchange Program. It is a non-profit organization out of Georgetown University, Larson said.

ISEP can arrange exchanges to 34 different locations, including places such as Mexico, Australia, Hong Kong and Togo. Some exchanges can be arranged even if the location is not listed.

Utrecht Network Exchange in Europe is a program in which the Big Eight Conference participates.

There are many other programs available through Study Abroad, and some academic departments have their own exchanges, Larson said.

■ K-State has sent hundreds of its students to different countries over the years. The students for the next round of exchanges have just been chosen.

Kelly Brungardt, junior in civil engineering, will be traveling to Argentina and spending the fall semester at the Universidad de Salavador.

"I want to learn to speak Spanish, and I've read a lot of neat things about the culture that would be interesting to see," she said.

While she is there, Brungardt said she is not going to study civil engineering, just Spanish.

Others who are participating in an exchange program will be continuing their major fields of study and earning class credit at K-State.

Drew Wallace, junior in marketing and finance, is going to study business in Mexico during the spring 1996 semester.

"I'm going for the business opportunities it will hopefully provide in the future. I'll hopefully learn from the experience," he said.

The classes he will be taking are all in Spanish, but he will receive credit for two international marketing and finance classes at K-State.

"I'm in my third year of Spanish and will be taking Spanish IV. In Mexico, I will take an extensive class before the semester starts," Wallace said.

■ The programs are not just for undergraduates; graduate and married students are also eligible.

Todd Stevenson, graduate student in history, is the first graduate student from K-State to apply to the program.

Both he and his wife will be making the trip to Munich, Germany, for a year beginning in September.

"I will take two classes to fulfill requirements and spend the rest of the time working on my thesis. I can go and work on my thesis in German libraries," Stevenson said.

■ This year, K-State has about 1,100 international students through exchange programs, Larson said.

Maria Cezimbra, junior in marketing, is from Brazil.

She has been at K-State since August and will go back home in May.

She said she came to America for several reasons.

"I've always wanted to come and study in the United States. English is very important in my country. It helps in business opportunities. And I love to travel," she said.

She said classes here are different from what she is used to. In Brazil, she said, she does not take multiple-choice tests.

They are all essay, and the grade system is more competitive, she said.

She said the teachers here are much more understanding and helpful, and here the students treat the professors better.

"I think you achieve the same success. It's just different here," she said.

■ Antonio Golmar, senior in political science, is from Madrid, Spain.

He said he came to the United States to see what it is like.

"I want to spend a few years in America. This will give me a feel for it. It's a launching pad, so I can come back," he said.

He said he likes Kansas and K-State because the people are friendly, and the campus is organized, but he does not like the no-smoking policy.

"People here are very rigid," Golmar said. "We smoke everywhere in public at home, and here I can't smoke anywhere. Smoking is not a crime."

He said he misses more than the freedom of smoking.

"I miss my mother. I can cook, but I can't wash my clothes, so I'm spending all of my money on dry cleaning," he said.

■ K-State students have to pay the cost of in-state K-State tuition to study in another country (even out-of-state students just pay in-state fees), plus the cost of the plane ticket and room and board, and anything else they want to spend money on, Larson said.

Living arrangements vary from country to country.

"Each country and college is different. Some have resident halls, apartments, flats or host families," Larson said.

Sarah Louise Engler, junior in anthropology, French and American ethnic studies, said she got the idea to become an exchange student when someone came and talked to an honors class about it. Now, she is going to France.

"I want to learn more about French language and culture," Engler said.

"Plus I have an undying affection for red wine and loose men. I think it will be a lot of fun," she said.

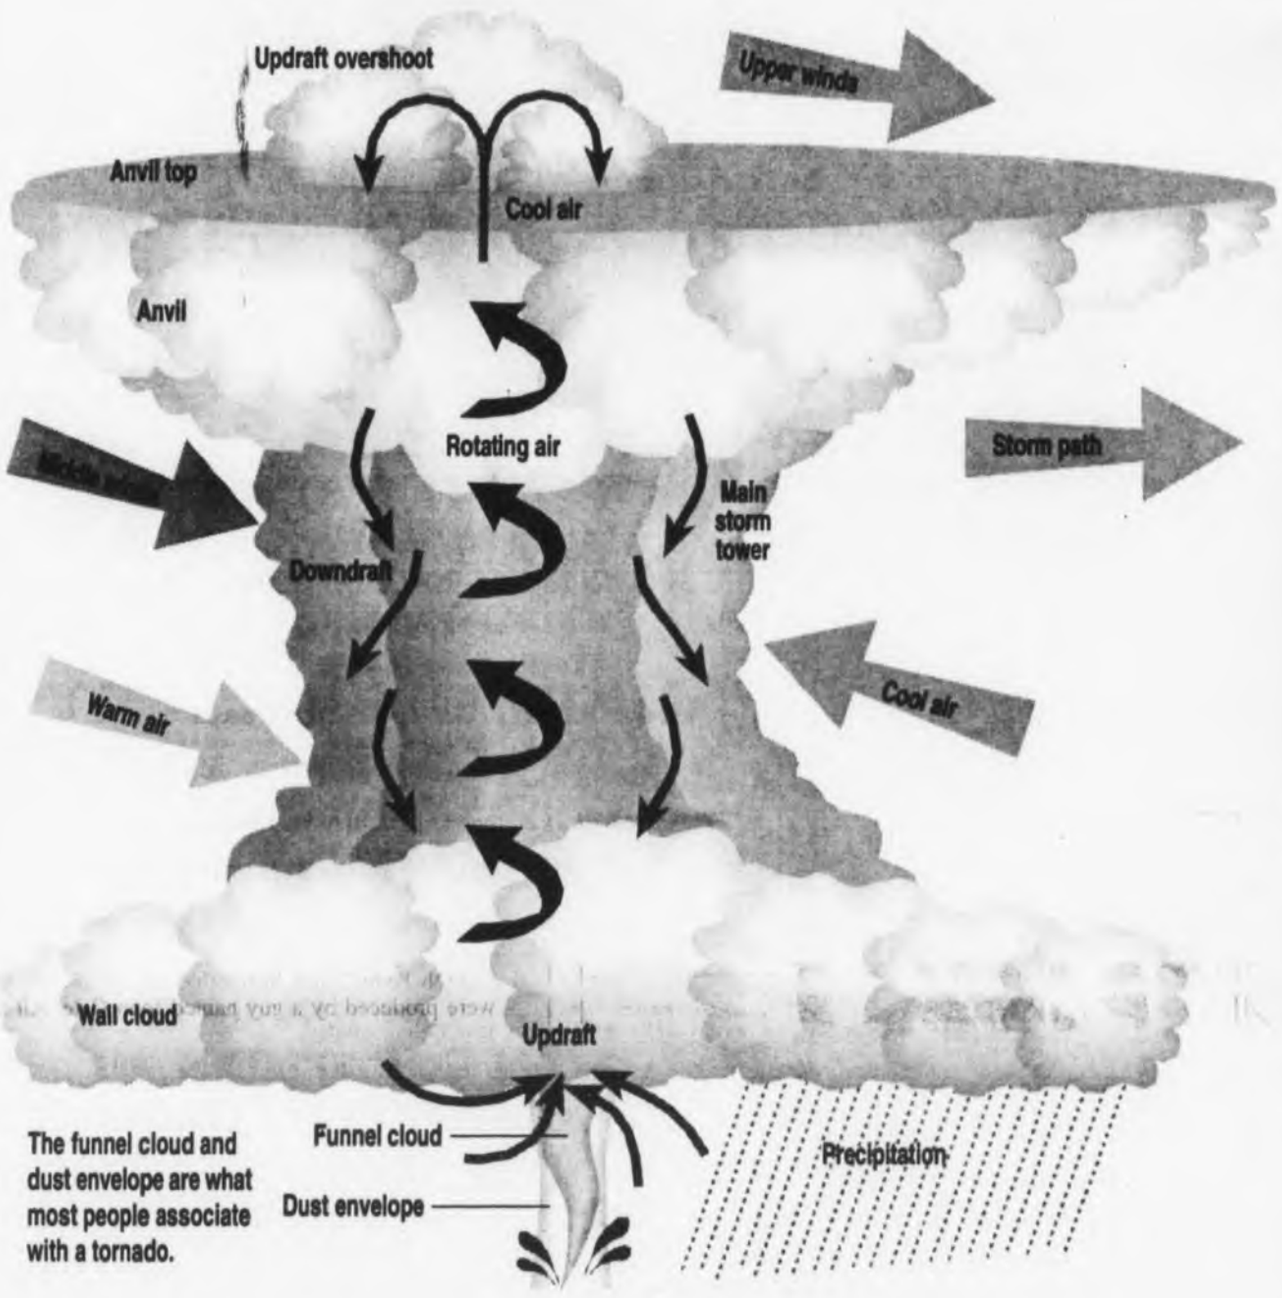
Hearing on Proposed Parking Regulations

A public hearing is scheduled for 3:00 p.m., Thursday, April 13, 1995, Big 8 Room, K-State Union. The proposed changes for FY 96 include:



a. Increase of parking permit annual fees of $5 for students and $10 for faculty staff.
b. Reserved stall costs have increased.
c. Parking lots may be closed to public on game days and special event days.
d. Driving on pedestrian walkways and sidewalks will be closely monitored and misuse fees may be assessed.
e. Misuse fees for parking in stalls signed for physically disabled may be increased to $100 in accordance with SB262, Sect. 3(b).
f. Bicycle misuse fees have been reduced to motor vehicle misuse fee amounts.
g. Appeal times have increased from five (5) to eight (8) days.
h. Vehicles having three or more delinquent parking citations and parked on campus are defined as "Excessive Violators."

The hearing is being held to receive comments about the proposed regulations.

TWISTER TIME

A tornado touches down, striking the Keats area in the summer of 1993 and destroying the Stan Schurle farm.

FREQUENCY IN THE UNITED STATES

This map indicates the average number of tornadoes that occur in each state annually.

Kansas tornado season brings danger, uncertainty

We are all aware of the destructive power of tornadoes.

Wind speeds can exceed 250 mph.

Damage paths can be in excess of one mile wide and 50 miles long.

In an average year, 800 tornadoes are reported nationwide, resulting in 80 deaths and more than 1,500 injuries.

Tornado season starts March 1 and runs through June 3.

However, John Skare, severe weather observer for Riley County, said there have been tornadoes every month except for January.

Living in Kansas involves dealing with the danger and uncertainty tornado season brings.

Stan, Betty, Jeff and Karen Schurle, a family living near Keats, know firsthand about the destruction of tornadoes.

The Schurles' home and farm were destroyed when they fell in a tornado's path on June 30, 1993.

Stan and Betty were on the way home from Kansas City when they heard about the severe weather conditions around Manhattan and specifically the Keats area.

"I knew that our children were home, and it was frightening to know they were in danger. We prayed a lot," Betty said.

She said when they were at Stan's mother's home in Manhattan waiting for the roads to open so they could go home, they found out their children were safe.

"They told us that our whole farm was gone, but that really didn't matter when we knew our kids were OK," Betty said.

> "They told us that our whole farm was gone, but that really didn't matter when we knew our kids were OK."
> BETTY SCHURLE
> Keats resident

Jeff and Karen had gone to the basement, and when they realized the weather was serious, they crouched down as they were taught in school underneath the stairwell.

They said their ears hurt from the pressure and that they could hear thumping, bumping and ripping, but not the freight-train noise others report.

Betty said people should take tornado warnings seriously.

"It does happen, and not always to other people."

When they returned home, they knew what the media had said was right. The tornado had wiped out their home and barn, took off the tops of trees and twisted farm equipment.

"We were devastated but numb," Betty said.

Riley County has a group of weather watchers that spot tornadoes.

"Basically, we look for the rain-free base out of a rotating wall cloud," Skare said.

Once a tornado is spotted by a weather watcher, they contact the police department.

"Once we're contacted, we have the responsibility to set off sirens or cut into television and radio," said Larry Freeby, traffic and patrol supervisor.

In the case of a tornado warning, the sirens are sounded for a steady three-minute blast.

Knowing the difference between a watch and warning is important. If a tornado watch is issued, it means that conditions are favorable for the formation of tornadoes. When a warning is issued, it means a tornado has been spotted or detected on radar.

When tornado sirens are sounded or warnings are issued, you should know where to go and what to do.

Students renting apartments and houses without adequate storm shelter should be especially concerned.

"That is something students should address with their landlords when they sign their lease," Freeby said.

The best protection during a tornado is in a reinforced concrete basement or storm shelter.

If you do not have a basement, go to the interior hallways or an interior room on the lowest level of a building.

A basement stairwell is another good place to take cover. Sturdy furniture can also provide protection.

"Get under something heavy if possible," said John Lambert, director of the division of public safety.

Another way to protect yourself is inside a bathtub, covered with blankets, pillows or a mattress.

"You should stay away from windows and other materials that could fly around," Lambert said.

If you live in a mobile home or trailer, you should seek shelter in a building or other designated area.

Be sure to stay in shelter until you have heard conditions have improved.

If there is no shelter available and you are in a vehicle, trailer or mobile home, you should lie flat in the nearest ditch, ravine or culvert.

If you need a place to go in a tornado warning, you can go to a public building during business hours or to a fire station.

Being prepared for a tornado not only involves knowing where to go but also putting together an emergency kit.

This kit should include a battery-operated flashlight, radio, nonperishable food, water and a first-aid kit in a waterproof container. Be sure to check the batteries in your flashlight and radio periodically to be completely prepared.

CHARACTERISTICS

Time of day — Tornadoes can occur at any time, but they are most likely to occur during the mid-afternoon, usually between 3 and 7 p.m.

Direction of movement — The typical movement is from southwest to northeast.

Length of path — The average path length is four miles, but it can reach up to 300 miles.

Width of path — The average tornado has a width of about 300 to 400 yards. They have been known, however, to be as much as a mile or more in width.

Speed of travel — The usual speed is from 25 to 40 mph with winds up to 350 mph.

Precipitation — Rain usually precedes the storm, often accompanied by hail. A heavy downpour typically falls immediately to the left of the tornado's path.

Sound — Roaring or rushing noises, closely resembling those made by airplanes or trains in tunnels, have been reported to accompany tornadoes.

PARTS OF A TORNADO

Supercell thunderstorm — A rare type of thunderstorm containing a rotation that produces severe weather, which can include hail, tornadoes and downbursts of more than 80 mph.

Updraft overshoot — A cloud that pushes through the top of the anvil. A large overshoot indicates an updraft strong enough to produce severe weather.

Funnel cloud — The portion of a tornado that is most visible from the ground. It is usually white as it approaches the ground but is darkened by ground debris and water condensation.

Dust envelope — A faint dust sheath surrounding the funnel cloud.

Anvil cloud — The upper portion of the thunderstorm cloud. The top of the anvil typically reaches 40,000 feet.

Wall cloud — Lower portion of the thunderstorm cloud. The wall cloud typically emits precipitation on one side of the funnel cloud and no precipitation on the other.

SAFETY TIPS

Tornado watch — Tornadoes are possible. People should be cautious and listen for weather advisories.

Tornado warning — A tornado has been sighted or indicated by radar. Seek shelter.

WHERE TO SEEK SHELTER IF YOU ARE IN:

- A a home — Take shelter in the basement under sturdy furniture, or go to the center of an interior room without windows, like a closet or bathroom. Avoid exterior rooms with an outside wall on the south or west side of the home.
- A a car — Leave your car and find sturdy shelter. If you are not near a building, seek shelter in a ditch or ravine or lie on the ground upwind of your car and cover your head.
- A mobile home — Leave your trailer and seek shelter in an administration building with a basement or approved shelter area.
- A school — Go to a storm cellar or underground shelter if possible. If there is no underground shelter, you should go to interior hallways or rooms on the lowest floor and cover your head. Avoid gymnasiums, auditoriums and other rooms with freespan roofs.

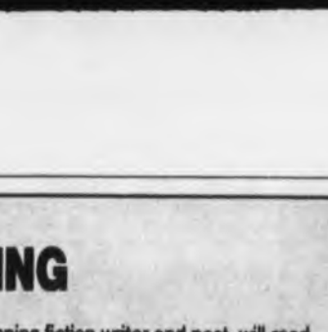
Reader's high-school crush rekindled

Dear Cassie,

I fell madly in love with this guy in high school. We were good friends, and I always wanted to tell him how I felt, but he was a couple of years older than me and really popular. I was too shy, too. We never got together. And I ended up getting over him, or so I thought.

When I came up to K-State a few years later, I found out he was up here. We got to know one another again and became friends like before. Suddenly, I have started to feel those feelings again. I don't know how to stop them.



Signed, Ye Olde Flame

Dear Ye Olde,

You have two choices. You can either bury your feelings and completely ignore them, or you can grab him and make him realize just how serious you are. I'd opt for the latter if I were you.

ANDY BARTLETT
Collegian

I remember the first time I heard a Siouxsie and the Banshees song. I saw the video for "Peek a Boo," and I hated it. I thought it was really obnoxious.

In summer 1991, I heard "Kiss Them For Me," which I liked immediately. This got me hooked on the Banshees, and I've been a big fan ever since.

Like every music fan, after awhile, I started to wonder when the new Banshees compact disc would be out. After a year or so, I started waiting for news of a new release. And I waited ... and waited ... and waited ...

In February, I saw that the Banshees were finally releasing a new CD. A few weeks before I'd heard of the new release, I broke out "Superstition" and played it for three or four days straight. I was reminded why I became a fan of the Banshees, and I was sure that their new CD, "The Rapture," would be just as good.

Then I listened to it, and my excitement was dashed. It started out bad and, save for a few really good tracks, didn't get much better.

The first track, "Oh Baby," sets the tone. This song's just bad. Bad music, silly lyrics — "I'm in a state of weightlessness/when I inhale your breath." Whatever. The best way to describe it is sappy, something the Banshees don't do well.

"Oh Baby" and four other tracks on the CD were produced by a guy named John Cale. All but one of them stink.

The problem with the songs is that there's nothing unique about them. When the Banshees are at their best, they have a truly different sound. Here that's not the case. Siouxsie's vocals are all that keep this from sounding like any of a hundred other CDs.

The best example of this is "Fall From Grace." Siouxsie sounds like her old self, but the music could have been sampled right off a Belly CD. The Banshees are supposed to be different and use wild stuff like cellos and harps and whatever it was they used on "Kiss Them For Me." Not here. This is radio junk.

The middle of the CD gets better. "Not Forgotten" and "Sick Child" are the great songs I'd expected to hear on the whole CD. These are signature Banshees tunes — haunting music and almost-eerie vocals. The music in "Not Forgotten" has an almost Twin-Peaksish quality to it, and there's a little moaning between the verses. This is what the Banshees do well.

The only Cale-produced song worth anything is "Falling Down." It starts off up-tempo and then tails off before the vocals start. It's got unusual, quirky music and really cool lyrics. Sioux's vocals are at their best, and she shows off her ability to repeat a line and make it sound entirely different. I've always liked this about her. It keeps the listeners on their toes.

The crown jewel of this CD is the very last track. "Love Out Me" is one of the best Banshees songs ever. It is so good that it almost makes up for the rest of the CD being so disappointing and has the potential to be a Banshees classic.

The music is frantic and high-paced, and there are a lot of interesting background instruments under the guitars. Sioux's vocals are as frantic as the music, and she really slams out the lyrics. I can picture her singing this during the days of her "Blade Runner" look, screaming into a mike. This is really good stuff.

"The Rapture" is a decent CD, but not what I've come to expect from the Banshees. For the most part, it's pretty uninspired stuff. Even though there are some great tracks, I won't give it much more playing time. It's not terrible, but it doesn't deserve to be called "The Rapture."

'90s media, East Germany inspirations for art displays

UNION ART GALLERY

A new master of fine arts exhibit opened Monday in the K-State Union Art Gallery, featuring "Letterwork" by Jim Hellman and work by Bob Nellis.

Nellis said his work, particularly "Danger Series," or "Media Overload," is a response to the effect 1990s media has on society and the individual. It is located in the center of the gallery.

Nellis' blaring color scheme and cartoony depictions lampoon as well as criticize the state of television. Even Mickey Mouse gets thrown into the mix with a warning of "don't taunt the mouse, man, he'll freak."

Above the centerpiece work are bomb-like televisions displaying fuzzy pictures of black-and-white TV personalities, implying society is bombarded with images and sound bites.

Hellman said he creates, modifies and mutilates types (computer typeface) to form types, which speak with different voices and personality.

Particularly witty are his "Richter Speciman Sheets" and "Mentholatum Experiments," both laserprints.

"Richter" is a bunch of types, which have supposedly been shaken by an earthquake of varying magnitude. In each example of "Mentholatum," Hellman has approached the subject, which includes the directions from a box of Mentholatum, from a different perspective.

The show runs through Friday with a closing reception on Friday from 7 to 9 p.m. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

WILLARD ART GALLERY

A new bachelor of fine arts exhibit, featuring work by Kenrick Walz and Corey Froschheuser, opened Monday in the Willard Gallery.

Walz creates large, colorful oil paintings that deal with figural representations.

Walz said he is inspired by the abstract expressionists, particularly Willem deKooning.

His work is a combination of figure, line and color, he said.

"I'm mainly interested in representing the figure and expressionistic mark-making," he said.

Walz's "Embrace," a work in oil, is divided by colors but unites through its figural representations.

Froschheuser's work consists of charcoal and pencil drawings of inviting, relaxed nudes. Drawn with delicate lines and smooth shading, his nudes have weight and are rendered comfortably.

If you're uncomfortable standing, the two artists have provided a faux living room complete with TV tray and lamp for your resting convenience. Nice touch.

The show runs through Friday with a closing reception on Friday from 7 to 9 p.m. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

SEATON HALL

"The Vanishing Curtain — Urban Mutations in East Germany," is an exhibition depicting East German cities and how they have changed since unification in 1990. The exhibit contains material used in an open forum in Germany in 1994.

The exhibit will be showing now through April 21 in Seaton 260.

FBI violated suspect's rights

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — Qubilah Shabazz's confession to FBI agents can't be used against her because FBI agents violated her constitutional rights when they entered her home without a warrant, a magistrate ruled Tuesday.

But in his ruling, U.S. Magistrate Franklin Noel denied a defense motion to dismiss the murder-for-hire charges against Malcolm X's daughter.

"We're very pleased with the court's ruling regarding the suppression of statements," said Ron Kuby, who is working on the case with law partner William Kunstler.

Shabazz, 34, is accused of plotting to hire her high-school friend Michael Fitzpatrick to kill Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

According to transcripts of their telephone conversations, Shabazz believed Farrakhan was responsible for her father's assassination in 1965, and she feared for the safety of her mother, Betty Shabazz, who had publicly expressed her suspicion of Farrakhan.

Defense attorneys have claimed Fitzpatrick was able to manipulate Shabazz because she was in love with him. Farrakhan, who denied any role in the assassination, has also said he believed Shabazz was set up.

In throwing out Shabazz's confession, Noel ruled that her Fourth Amendment rights were violated when two FBI agents entered her home Dec. 20 without permission and lied about how they had acquired information about the alleged plot.

The agents told her they were investigating coin dealing fraud involving Fitzpatrick's employer.

Noel refused to throw out the secretly taped conversations between Shabazz and Fitzpatrick. He said the tapes were admissible because Shabazz's privacy was not violated and Fitzpatrick was aware of the government surveillance.

The defense had sought for dismissal of the case on several grounds, including constitutional violations and government misconduct. Noel's ruling goes to U.S. District Judge James M. Rosenbaum, who can either accept or reject it.

Noel ruled that the question of government misconduct should be answered at trial.

"If the jury were to conclude that her conversations about the scheme were just idle chatter, or that the statements were made only to impress a potential suitor, with no intent that the scheme really be implemented, she will be entitled to an acquittal," he wrote.

Prosecutors have described Shabazz's statements to the FBI as a confession to involvement in the alleged murder-for-hire plot.

In the statement, she described a conversation with Fitzpatrick in which she "jokingly asked Fitzpatrick if he would kill Louis Farrakhan."

If convicted, Shabazz faces up to 90 years in prison and a $2.25-million fine. Trial is set for May 1.

American prisoners suffer in Iraqi cell

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Two imprisoned Americans are languishing in rough conditions in a cellblock with 200 inmates and three holes for toilet facilities, a Polish diplomat and a reporter said Tuesday.

The diplomat, Ryszard Krystosik, visited the pair in the maximum-security Abu Ghraib prison. They were sentenced March 25 to eight-year terms for illegally entering the country.

"They are well. They're better than before. However, their conditions are difficult," said Krystosik, who represents U.S. interests in Iraq in the absence of direct relations between Baghdad and Washington.

The prisoners — David Daliberti, 41, of Jacksonville, Fla., and William Barloon, 39, of New Hampton, Iowa, were arrested by Iraqi border guards on March 13.

Cable News Network correspondent Brent Sadler visited the prisoners Tuesday and said they appear "more determined" and thinner than before.

He said Daliberti is increasingly concerned about his health and was seen Tuesday by two heart doctors and two eye doctors.

According to Sadler, the men said they are being kept in a small cell along a cell block that holds about 200 prisoners, including murderers. Three holes in the floor function as toilet facilities for all of them, Sadler said.

The mens' wives, Kathy Daliberti in Jacksonville and Linda Barloon in Kuwait City, said they were grateful to hear about their husbands but that the incarceration seemed unfair.

Sadler told the women their husbands had lost weight and were wearing the same jeans and jackets that they had on when detained, but that they appeared to be cleaner and to be wearing laundered clothing.

Daliberti and Barloon, who worked for U.S. defense contractors in Kuwait, say they unwittingly strayed into Iraq while trying to visit friends at a U.N. post near the Kuwaiti border.

Khaled Jarjees, the pair's Iraqi lawyer, has said he will argue in an appeal this week that the men entered Iraq unwittingly and unintentionally.

Krystosik met with Jarjees on Monday, but neither he nor the attorney would comment on the appeal. Iraq has banned journalists from meeting or calling Jarjees.

U.N. personnel in the demilitarized zone along Iraq's southern frontier admit they mistakenly waved the men through onto Iraqi soil, and the United States has repeatedly appealed for the pair's release.

But Iraqi officials suggest that the Americans entered with ulterior motives tied to U.S. efforts to prolong the U.N. oil and trade embargo imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

"These men ... they didn't stray. They knew where they were going," Information Minister Hamed Yousef Hammadi said in an interview on Cable News Network.

The Clinton administration said Tuesday that Iraq is wrong if thinks it can extract a higher price for the Americans' release by increasing publicity about their case.

"There is nothing to negotiate," White House press secretary Mike McCurry said. "We are pressing through the United Nations as well as through other diplomatic channels for the release of the two Americans."

Hammadi denied American suggestions that Iraq was holding the men to force repeal of the debilitating sanctions. The Americans' imprisonment, he said, "is not a political problem ... it is a purely a legal problem."

Airline sued for firing workers with AIDS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — Two pilots have sued United Airlines, claiming they were illegally fired after the company learned they have the AIDS virus.

"United forced two airline pilots into medical retirement based on unfounded fears and stereotypes," lawyer Peter F. Laura said at a news conference Tuesday.

Laura represents R. Christopher Prilliman, who was fired last year, along with Paul Rafalowski. Prilliman, 38, was fired in October and Rafalowski, 33, in June. Both had worked for the airline for nine years and were still flying planes when they were fired.

The lawsuit, filed in federal court Friday, seeks unspecified damages under the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Laura said the lawsuit was aimed at forcing reforms of United and Federal Aviation Administration policies.

Dr. Gary Kohn, medical director at United's Chicago headquarters, said the FAA informed the airline that the pilots had several health conditions that mandated their dismissal under agency regulations.

He referred further questions to FAA regional offices in Illinois. A call seeking comment from the agency was not immediately returned.

Claire Stroede, senior in mechanical engineering, said her student fee gave her a large incentive to come out and vote.

"We pay student fees, and they allocate money," Stroede said.

"I want it to go to the right places."

Students may go to the polls today again from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. in the K-State Union. You will need a student ID and a No. 2 pencil. Veterinary medicine students can vote in Trotter Hall from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Ring, Friedrichs top list for campaign spending

$100 deposit we put down on a sound system that we rented, and we got the deposit back. There is a difference in what we claimed and what we actually spent," Andrew Tomb said.

Presidential candidate Liz Ring spent the most money on her campaign.

"Our report was very honest. I recorded everything down to the scissors and tape that we used on the signs," Ring said.

Ring said she and Paul Friedrichs finished their campaigning before election day.

"I love going to clubs and talking to the voters or going door to door, so the people can ask questions. I hate election-day campaigning, standing outside handing out cards," Ring said.

the truth of the matter," he said.

Reagan said Raspberry is known for being a man of independent thought.

"His column is a very insightful and an independent perspective of social and political issues," he said.

Raspberry said he tends to stray from common thought.

"I tend to reach my own conclusions instead of what the group may decide. I think the readers appreciate this," he said.

Raspberry won the 1994 Pulitzer Prize for commentary for his writing on such topics as crime, AIDS, the Nation of Islam and rap lyrics.

Raspberry said his perspective on rap music has two objections.

"I don't think it is real music, and I don't like it mainly because the lyrics of gangsta rap brutally put women down," he said.

Reagan said he hopes students will take advantage of the opportunity to hear Raspberry speak.

"I hope the students go to the speech because they will appreciate Raspberry's insight," Reagan said.

Raspberry said he is looking forward to coming to Kansas.

"I am not only looking forward to coming to Kansas, but it is an honor to be part of such a venerable lecture series," he said.

Records don't require fee approval

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Bill Graves announced he has signed into law 17 more bills passed by the 1995 Legislature, including one that allows state agencies to charge any reasonable fee for copies of public records without getting approval.

Currently, agencies of the executive branch may charge any fee they wish up to 25 cents per copy. If the amount is more than that, the fee must be approved by the director of accounts and reports.

The bill removes the approval requirement and allows agencies to charge any amount they choose. If the person requesting copies of records protests the reasonableness of the fee, he or she can appeal to the secretary of administration, whose decision would be final.

The bill defines a 25-cent per copy fee as reasonable but doesn't preclude an agency from charging more, if the secretary approves on appeal.

Other bills announced on Tuesday as signed were ones that would:

- No longer require school districts, county jails or state prisons to provide educational services to inmates older than 16 years of age who were convicted of crimes as adults.
- Require the Kansas Technology Enterprise Corp. (KTEC) to establish a technology-based venture capital fund.
- Require insurers to inform in writing people who have been denied private health insurance coverage that coverage is available through the Kansas Health Insurance Association.
- Repeal the 5-mill intangibles tax imposed on financial institutions starting in the current tax year.
- Allow the University of Kansas Medical Center to operate off-campus medical care facilities and to make direct purchases of goods and services in excess of $25,000.
- Allow the Kansas Water Authority to participate in research, development and operational programs as funds are available.

Violence threatens plans for peace talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico — A clash between armed men in rebel uniforms and villagers loyal to the government killed four people and wounded at least nine others, news reports said Tuesday.

The burst of violence Monday came as leaders of the Zapatista rebel movement and government representatives were announcing they will meet in 10 days for preparatory talks on a new round of peace negotiations.

Neither rebel representatives nor the mediation commission led by Roman Catholic Bishop Samuel Ruiz commented Tuesday on the clash.

Local news media reported that a column of several dozen armed men dressed in uniforms like those used by the Zapatista National Liberation Army entered the remote village of Bademia on horseback early Monday.

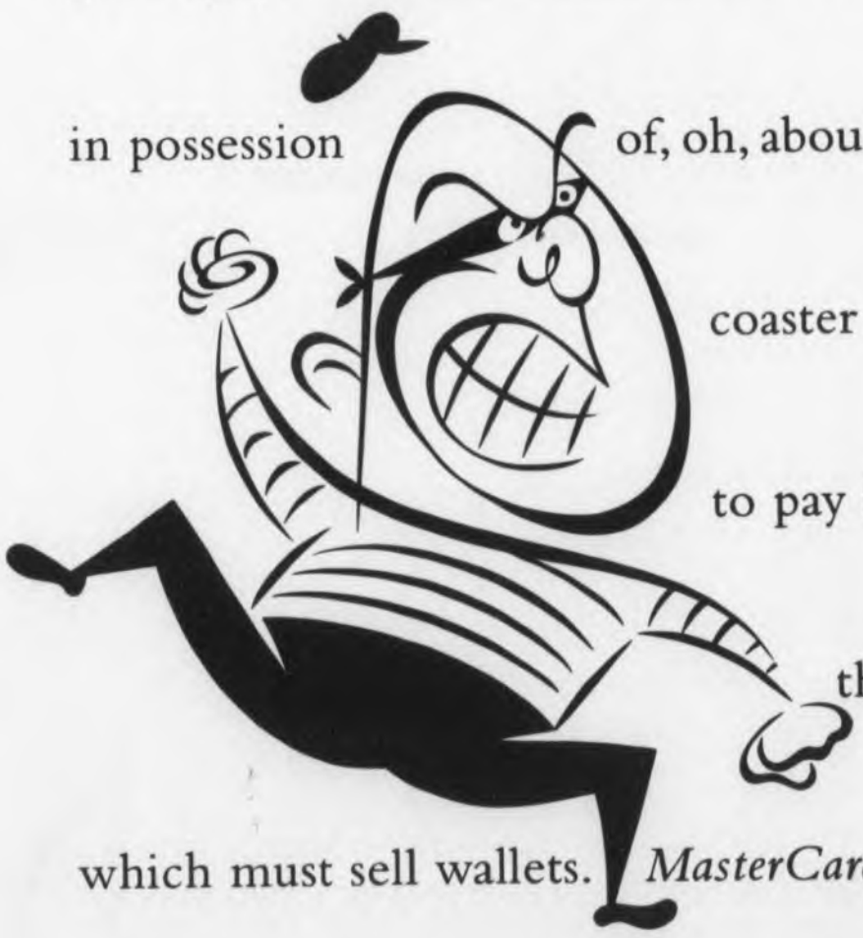
Humberto Velasco, a municipal trustee, told the Cuarto Poder newspaper that the villagers, mostly members of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, refused the armed men's demands to join their group.

Bademia resident Humberto Lopez Hernandez, who was wounded in the firefight, told reporters from his hospital bed in Comitan that the invading group went from house to house, demanding that the villagers turn over any weapons or radio equipment.

The two sides exchanged gunfire, leaving four men dead and at least nine wounded, Lopez Hernandez said. Three of those killed were members of the invading group and the fourth was a villager. It was unclear who fired first.

The clash occurred shortly after midnight Monday, at about the time when Zapatista leaders and government representatives announced they would meet in Larrainzar on April 20 to lay the basis for talks on ending the 16-month-old conflict in the southern state of Chiapas.

It was impossible Tuesday to determine whether the armed men were Zapatistas or another group imitating rebel dress.



Villagers told reporters that the men wore brown long-sleeved shirts, olive green slacks and ski masks like those used by the rebels. They said the invaders were armed mostly with old hunting rifles or machetes.

Residents in rebel strongholds have complained in the past about the Zapatistas pressuring them to join their fight, but there have been few reports of violence against civilians since the fighting ended with a cease-fire on Jan. 12, 1994.

The Zapatistas led a Jan. 1, 1994, uprising to demand better conditions for Indian peasants in Chiapas, Mexico's poorest state. 145 people were killed in the strife before the cease-fire reached earlier this year.

PETERSON & RING to face off

Ring, Friedrichs ready for round 2

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Excitement filled Lucky BrewGrille as word came that Liz Ring had gotten 914 votes in the student body presidential election.

This is enough to put her in a runoff election April 18 against incumbent student body president Jeff Peterson.

Ring, junior in history and economics, said she was pleased with the results and will make few changes to her campaign within the next week.

"We want to have a lot of people involved in the campaign and have fun," Ring said.

Paul Friedrichs, junior in agricultural economics, said he was also excited to be in the final race.

"We're glad, we're hyped, and we're excited to be in the race," Friedrichs said.

Ring and Friedrichs both thanked the supporters who have helped them in the campaign so far.

"There are a lot of people who truly agreed with us and who really wanted to help," Ring said.

Ring and Friedrichs were also excited to have members of their families in town to share in the celebration. They said their families have been extremely supportive of the decision.

Ben Clouse, campaign manager, said the result of the runoff election was close to what he had expected.

"I was planning Jeff and Liz being in the runoff," Clouse said. "We felt they were the strongest two contenders."

Ring said that views on linear fees and line-item fees are a major difference between herself and Peterson.

Ring said she favors a cap on the number of hours charged, while Peterson favors straight linear tuition. Ring favors no user fees, while Peterson favors a line-item fee.

Executive initiative will also be stressed in next week's campaign, Clouse said.

"Liz and Paul really feel the executive should play a larger role and set the tone for Student Senate issues," Clouse said.

Ring said she thought that Friedrichs' and her specific attention to student needs was one of the things that gave them an edge over the competition.

"Talking to students was one of the most fun parts of our campaign," Ring said.

Gaining student input will continue for this duo in the campaign, Friedrichs said.

"As we listen to them, we really get a feel for the pulse of the campus," Friedrichs said.

Both experience and new ideas have made Ring and Friedrichs top contenders, Clouse said.

"Both of them have experience in student government but have fresh ideas," Clouse said. "That is the combination that I think puts us over the top."

Peterson, Finkeldei go for 2nd term

President again?

1,067 votes pulled incumbents Jeff Peterson and Brad Finkeldei into the runoff election just ahead of Liz Ring and Paul Friedrichs.

"I think students saw us as being very open and honest," Peterson said.

In the next week, Peterson, current student body president, said he would like to see increased exposure of issues.

"Our most premier issue is the cost," he said.

Finkeldei, current student body vice president, said the cost of education is very important.

He said students need to understand they can make a difference in the cost of education by voting for people who want to work on student cost.

Peterson said the next week, before the runoff election, will be a good opportunity to point out differences in the candidates.

Peterson said in the past year, they have focused on student fees, tuition and working with the Kansas Board of Regents.

"We're focused, and we're very clear," Peterson said.

Mike Zamrzla, chief of staff, said the campaign's important issues included a decrease in student fees and support for line-item fees.

Zamrzla said students voted for the incumbents because of their focus on the issues, and students look at them as people they can trust.

"Students want a strong, capable leadership, and they voted for Jeff and Brad," Zamrzla said.

Finkeldei said his perspective of the leadership student government offers has changed in the past year since beginning his role as vice president.

The first time he stepped into the Student Governing Association office was the day he registered as a candidate for student body vice president, and ever since he has been impressed with how much student government actually does, he said.

"It makes me feel good that I'm a part of it," he said.

Finkeldei's involvement with student government began with a letter to Peterson, he said.

Although he didn't know Peterson, he had heard of him through some friends at FarmHouse and agreed on the issues Peterson represented, Finkeldei said.

Peterson said he received the letter from Finkeldei during spring break last year and decided to meet with him during the first weekend of break.

"We met in the Union. Three days later, we registered together," Peterson said.

Last year's campaign focused on cost and the students. This year's campaign theme is "Because it matters."

Zamrzla said the theme means students can make a difference — students have a voice and are important.

LOSERS ENDORSE RUNOFF CHOICES

by kristin brighton, mary emerson and melissa hoyt

The end. Almost.

Three presidential camps ended their bids for student body president but pledged their support for the remaining two teams.

Presidential candidate Scott Phillips, senior in public relations and business, and running mate Patrick Carney, senior in political science, took third in the election with 15.1 percent of the votes. They came in behind Jeff Peterson, graduate student in animal science and industry, and Liz Ring, junior in history and economics.

Phillips said he was not sure if he and Carney would be supporting another candidate.

"We haven't decided yet. Just finding out what the numbers are, we'll have to sit down and think about it, but we'll definitely vote. I wish both candidates the best of luck," he said.

Phillips and Carney waited in the crowded atmosphere at Scoreboard in Aggieville for the call to come in.

Although Phillips is undecided about support, Carney said he has no doubts about which candidate he will back.

"Scott may have said good luck to both candidates, but I will throw all of my support behind Liz. I will say it as loud as possible," Carney said.

Carney gave only one reason why he will back Ring and her partner, Paul Friedrichs, junior in agricultural economics.

"I think this election comes down to if you are satisfied with what student government is, or what you think it should be. If you don't think student government is what it should be, then there is only one way to go — Ring and Friedrichs," he said.

"I just want everyone to vote Wednesday to make SGA make a difference. If they don't vote, they shouldn't gripe," Carney said.

Both said they felt they ran a good campaign, and if they had it to do again, it would be the same.

"I just want to say thank you to those who did vote, and hopefully, we'll get someone in who gets across what we wanted to get across," he said.

Andrew and Mark Tomb, candidates for student body president and vice president, chose Java as the spot for their wait because of the luck it brought Justin Kastner as he waited for results in the city commission race.

Circled around a borrowed cellular phone that never rang and beginning to worry that the phone needed to be recharged, the brothers found out that luck had run out when the call came in — on Java's phone.

"We were the underdog going in, and I guess we still are," Andrew, senior in political science and speech, said after pulling in 10 percent of the vote.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ POLICE SAY WAMEGO MAN'S DEATH BEING INVESTIGATED AS HOMICIDE

The Riley County Police Department is investigating the death of Wamego resident Aaron Williams as a homicide.

Capt. Allen Raynor, commander of the Riley County criminal investigation division, said although the body was not mangled, evidence indicated a violent death.

Findings from the autopsy ruled out the possibility of suicide or an accidental death, he said.

Williams, missing since March 23, was found Friday in the Kansas River, one-fourth of a mile downstream from where crews were searching.

People hunting for mushrooms found Williams in the river bed after the water had lowered about a foot and a half, Raynor said.

Raynor said fingerprints positively identified the body as 31-year-old Williams.

He said he did not want to elaborate on the condition of the body because of the investigation.

Also, the condition of Williams' car, found abandoned off Collins Lane near Hunters Island, indicated foul play, Raynor said.

"We suspected from the moment we saw the car," Raynor said.

Riley County, Kansas Bureau of Investigations, Pottawatomie County Sheriff's and the Wamego Police are assisting in the investigation.

▶ RETIRED K-STATE UNION EMPLOYEE DIES AFTER BATTLE WITH CANCER

Lucille Keen, former supervisor of the KSU Office Supply Store in the K-State Union, died Tuesday after a long battle with cancer.

Keen was the supervisor of the store for 22 years.

Twila Hoffman, secretary of the K-State Union Bookstore, said the office supply store provides service for all departments on campus, so Keen was well-known.

"She was a hard worker and always there to do her job," Hoffman said.

Sandy Barnes, current supervisor of the office supply store, said Keen was friendly and helpful to her customers.

"She did everything to help them and became close with a lot of them," Barnes said.

Keen retired Nov. 1, 1993, because of her illness.

Keen's husband of 45 years, Darrell, said she was proud of her job and proud to work at K-State.

"She thought K-State basketball was the greatest," Darrell said.

He said she enjoyed meeting people in her job at the Union Bookstore and would see people she knew everywhere.

"She had a great personality, and she had a great life," Darrell said.

The funeral will be at 10 a.m. Friday at the Piper-Verschelden Funeral Home in St. Mary's.

Visitation will be from 7 to 8 p.m. today.

A memorial is being established with the St. Mary's Hospice, and donnations can be made in care of Piper-Verschelden Funeral Home.

Lucille is survived by her husband, Darrell Keen of St. Mary's; a daughter, Regina Hoover; a son, Douglas Keen; and four grandchildren.

▶ ARAFAT ISSUES ULTIMATUM TO MILITANTS

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — PLO chief Yasser Arafat widened his crackdown on Islamic militants Wednesday by issuing an ultimatum: register your guns by May 11 or the Palestinian police will forcibly collect the firearms.

The Hamas group reacted with defiance, saying its fighters would not give up their weapons as long as Israeli forces remained in the Gaza Strip.

The challenge increased fears of civil war between the Hamas and Islamic Jihad militants and the PLO, which has ruled the autonomous areas of Gaza and Jericho for 11 months.

Tensions were high on the street, where PLO police were quick to draw their weapons Wednesday.

Three plainclothes security men pulled over a Western reporter riding in a taxi, waving assault rifles as they demanded identification.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

For fast relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities designed to help build additional assets—money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.

Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pre-tax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on taxes right away. What's more, any earnings on your SRAs are also tax-deferred until you receive them as income. That can make a big difference in how painful your tax bill is every year.

As the nation's largest retirement system, we offer a wide range of allocation choices—from TIAA's traditional annuity, with its guarantees of principal and interest, to the seven diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity. What's more, our expenses are very low,* which means more of your money goes toward improving your future financial health.

To find out more, call our planning specialists at 1 800 842-2888. We'll send you a complete SRA information kit, plus a free slide-calculator that shows you how much SRAs can lower your taxes.

Call today—it couldn't hurt.

Help observe, celebrate Earth Day

Plan on attending campus-sponsored Earth Day events and start recycling.

If you haven't gone to any of this year's Earth Day activities, you still have a chance.

The activities, which started this week, will continue through next week, thanks to groups including Students for Sustainability, UPC Issues and Ideas, NFH Audubon Society, KSU Environmental Professionals and the Kansas Environmental Seminar Series.

We encourage you to attend any or all of the remaining events, which include a lecture by Gaylord Nelson, the founder of Earth Day, at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Union Forum Hall.

However, if you can't make it to any of the events, you can still celebrate the 25th anniversary of Earth Day simply by making use of recycling bins rather than throwing pop cans and newspapers away.

Better yet, take the time to save empty milk cartons, glass bottles and magazines and take them to the various recycling centers in town. If you don't want to do that for the sake of the environment, keep in mind you can make a little extra cash doing it.

If making money and saving the environment still aren't reason enough to recycle, remember this: years from now when you're no longer around, your children and their children will be.

Need we say more?

BUSTER

Christ still an important part of education

As followers of Christ prepare to celebrate his resurrection, the person of Jesus is making his presence known on campus.

Some feel that it is inappropriate for a secular university to publicly discuss Jesus. Yet in reality, there are few things more relevant for a secular university to discuss.

JOHN HART

Jesus is the single-most influential person in the history of the world, regardless of whether you accept his claims about himself to be true. Jim Slattery, a friend, Democrat and former congressman — who incidentally is not a member of the supposedly diabolical "religious right" that is supposedly behind every public pronouncement of Jesus, puts the point this way:

"For a university student to claim to be educated about western history without having an understanding of Jesus is like claiming to be an American historian without knowing who Thomas Jefferson is."

Another reason people may believe it is wrong to talk about the most important person in history at an institution that claims to provide us an understanding of history, is that Jesus speaks to our complete person when the University only speaks to our minds.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said it is essential that academic institutions talk about the spiritual part of men and women.

Even at a university, it's obvious that very, very few students are committed to finding meaning for their lives solely through reason and intellectual discourse. People just don't operate that way.

Human beings operate in several dimensions, mental, spiritual and emotional, yet universities only speak to people in one dimension — the mental.

Students want to experience life in every dimension. Obviously, Aggieville is at the center of more student's lives than is a philosophical love for Truth. Yet the party scene is a "tastes great, less filling" lifestyle when it comes to finding true meaning and purpose for our lives.

Followers of Christ claim that abundant life is found in a relationship with God through Jesus. Jesus claims this himself in the Bible when he says, "I have come that you may have life and have it abundantly."

As Christians celebrate Jesus, we need to evaluate how we present him to the world. In John 17, Jesus prayed for a unity, oneness and love among followers of Christ so that the world might believe Christ was sent by the Father.

It is no mystery that when the world sees Christians divided and publicly engaging in stupid bickering and bitter dialogue, they look at the supposedly holy character of Jesus and laugh.

Christians need to strive for unity not around religious denominations but the person of Jesus through the Holy Spirit in whom is the sole power to create that unity.

We should do this because Christ commands us to be one, and if we claim to be his followers, we should obey his commands.

If this violates any group or person's agenda, then such a group or person needs to reassess its agenda so that it conforms with the commands of God instead of trying to make the commands of God fit into our own self-serving goals.

Jesus assaults this mentality when he told the Pharisees — the religious leaders of his day, "You have a fine way of setting aside the commands of God in order to follow your own traditions."

One way Christians can show love for one another is to get out of our holy huddles and imitate Christ by reaching out to people who are different from us.

Author Francis Shaeffer said, "Our love will not be perfect, but it must be substantial enough for the world to be able to observe ... and if the world does not observe this love among true Christians, the world has a right to make two awful judgments John 17 indicates: That we are not Christians, and that Christ was not sent by the Father."

New SGA must follow up on campaign issues

By the time you read this, the elections will be over.

DAN LEWERENZ

I will either be returning for my second term in Student Senate, or I will have involuntarily joined those seeking greater turnover in student government.

It's too soon to tell. (Those of you who attended Calvin Trillin's University Convocation Lecture Wednesday will appreciate that. The rest of you can just laugh and pretend you were there to impress your friends.)

More than likely, though, the presidential race will not be decided. The survivors among this year's crop of candidates will continue to bring you their vision of what K-State can be, what SGA can do.

I have my own vision, and I'm not sure it jives with what the candidates are calling for. So in this space, I'd like to tell you what I'd like to see happen next year and in the next few years. In this way, I hope to influence the masses to rise up and demand justice, or at least get the ear of a candidate or two.

The candidates, of course, don't get paid to promote their ideas like I do (by the way, applications for Collegian columnists are due tomorrow), so I have a distinct advantage. But I guess that's the way things go.

Parking

I would like this issue to go away. There are enough parking spaces on this campus for everybody if we would just use them right.

But let's assume that's not the case. Let's pretend there really is a parking problem at K-State. Remember the gondola proposal from a while back? Nathan Petitjean, senior in civil engineering, did some research on the plausibility of constructing an overhead gondola system from Bramlage to campus with some interesting results.

Silly as this may sound, it might actually be a viable option. Stay tuned, I don't think this one is going to go away.

Campus safety

The Peterson administration, in conjunction with several residence halls, has led the way with the campus-wide escort service. This needs to be expanded to service students living farther from campus. I'm glad to see that a lot of the candidates recognize this as a priority.

Optional fees

Yes, keeping fees as low as possible is a good idea. And no, making them optional is not the way to go about that.

I realize that, for one reason or another, the services of Lafene are not used by a lot of students. They are covered by their parent's health insurance, or they have their own health-care plan, or whatever. These students do not get their money's worth from the fee.

But there are also students who cannot afford their own health insurance, students for whom the service at Lafene, paid for with a simple, low semester rate, is the only thing enabling them to attend K-State. The revenue generated by a flat fee assessed to all provides a service anyone can take advantage of and some desperately need.

Yeah, I know. That sounds an awful lot like socialism. So does public education. Anyone here who doesn't think socialism has a place in higher education can pay the out-of-state tuition and like it.

Internal affairs

People complained that for much of this year, Student Senate spent far too much time on process and far too little getting things done. I'm not going to defend what was done, just as I'm not going to condemn it. If you don't like it, tell your senator(s) and/or run for office so that things change.

I will say, however, that some things probably could use some improvement. Let's begin with representation. There are far too few international students serving in student government, just as there are far too few nontraditional students and students of color. These are precisely the people who often cry that student government is not responsive to their needs.

SGA must make the first step by actively reaching out to constituencies that are not strongly represented in their midst.

By doing so, they will create a more friendly environment, leading to more interaction with these constituencies and more of these students serving in SGA. Problem solved.

But it's hard to encourage outsiders to speak when the body seems to devalue the opinions of its own. Senate has this nasty tendency to end debate before all of the members have had a chance to speak. The chamber must be open to those within before it can even pretend to be open to those outside.

And that's my vision for student government. An agency — nay, a service — dedicated to listening to, then acting on, the interest of its constituency — the students.

▶ LANDON LECTURES

Students could attend if they wanted

Dear editor,

For the last two days, the Collegian editorial board has written editorials that border on a complete intellectual meltdown. They charge that the administration's policy of not excusing all classes because of a Landon Lecture deprives the students of another "right." This is ludicrous for several reasons.

First, in point of fact, classes used to be dismissed for the lectures. It had no effect in lecture attendance. Most students went to the Union or somewhere else. They simply didn't go to see the speakers in mass numbers. There is no evidence that a University-wide policy is needed to get more people to attend the lectures.

Second, who are these faculty members who are keeping people from going to the lectures? In my three years at this University, I have had no trouble getting excused from classes for debate, Landon Lectures, etc. Does the Collegian have any proof? Do they have any statistics or anecdotal evidence to support the claim that the faculty doesn't let students attend the lectures? Of course not, they are journalists.

Almost all professors are accommodating. This does not mean they will summarily excuse all students just because there is a lecture. It might even take a little work on the students' part to do make-up work. If the lecture is worth it, the student will do it. The only exception might be a test that runs at the same time as a lecture. In this case, God forbid, a student might miss one.

There are two options. First, since there is more than one lecture per year, a student can attend another one. This means that they are not totally deprived of an opportunity to see an important figure in public policy. Second, transcripts are almost always available by request and, sometimes, the speeches are broadcast locally and on C-Span. Tape the damn thing! If students really care, they will make the effort.

Third, the notion that most students can't attend the lecture is an outright lie. The classrooms on this campus can only accommodate a little more than a third of the student body at one time. This means that, at any given time, there are at least 12,000 students who are not in class. Where are they? They are not at the lecture. Furthermore, if two-thirds of the student body is available, the assertion that they are deprived is ludicrous.

I walked through the Union just before the William Perry lecture and saw that the place was full. Students sat like zombies in front of the big-screen television, and others sat in the stateroom chatting with their friends. Why wasn't the place empty? After all, it didn't appear as though these people had anywhere to go. Why wasn't the Collegian courageously herding those people to McCain to see the big lecture?

Again, when students want to go, they make the effort.

Fourth, who has the high ground in this debate? Does the Collegian expect me to believe that there is a mass of students who want very much to see the various speakers but are deathly worried about attendance? Except for tests, no class has a perfect attendance record.

Are you saying that students don't miss because of Aggieville or to go home early? Are you claiming that no student has ever violated an attendance policy set by the professor or the University? Why is attendance a big deal when it comes to lectures, but not hangovers?

"Why is attendance a big deal when it comes to lectures, but not hangovers?"

LEWIS REAGAN
senior in political science

The only students who can complain are those who have never voluntarily missed a day in their academic careers at K-State. These are also the same students who probably could afford to take the day off to see the lecture — all 10 of them.

I can see it now. Students chained to their desks yearning to daydream about William Raspberry and the other lost and oppressed souls who yearn to be free. The Collegian cares so much it is sickening.

In an average student's career at K-State, there are well over 10 Landon Lectures that take place. I have been attending since grade school and have never had a problem missing class. It is insulting to those who make an effort to attend the series to say that a University-wide policy must be in place to help students. It is unneeded.

I would be interested to see how many students have gone to every lecture that they possibly could. Probably not many.

The Collegian has put forth a singularly stupid argument. It has bashed an administration that has worked hard to make sure there is student access to the series. It has used the term right where none exists. It provided absolutely no evidence to support its claim.

Again, if the students want to make an effort to attend, they will.

It is as simple as that.

▶ DANCE

Better qualified reviewers needed

Dear editor,

In response to the SpringDance review printed April 3, 1995, I would like to encourage Russell Fortmeyer to expand his very limited knowledge and view of dance as entertainment and even more importantly as an art form.

Mr. Fortmeyer's incredibly shallow observation of the production illustrates nothing more than his obvious lack of talent as a dance critic. What is truly sad is that much-needed support of the K-State dance department and attendance of future performances by the Kansas State Repertory Dance Company could be negatively affected by this review.

When Russell Fortmeyer gains half the experience and knowledge concerning dance that any of the three faculty members in the dance department, as well as the students, possess, maybe then his opinion will be worth reading.

▶ FORUM ON JESUS

Forum isn't to demonstrate piety

Dear editor,

I am writing in response to Scott Allen Miller's column in Wednesday's Collegian. I served on the planning committee for the Forum on Jesus, and I would like to address some of the accusations made in the column.

"We are not trying to cram our ideas down people's throats."

AMY STEANSON
senior in English literature

The planning was small, but we were dedicated to putting on a week where the person of Jesus would be presented in an interesting and non-threatening way to the students of K-State. Because the committee was so small and the resources were limited, we could not present as broad a range of activities as we would have liked.

Yes, there is a talk entitled "Is Jesus the Christ?" Since the man claimed to be the Messiah, it is only right that in a Forum on Jesus there would be a lecture addressing that topic. I encourage everyone to attend the lecture series that addresses this issue as well as other claims made by Jesus.

The last lecture in the series takes place at 3:30 p.m. Friday in the Union Little Theatre. Go and find out if the lecturer preaches from a narrow-minded, right-wing point of view. The last thing we want is to spoon-feed people our ideology or publicly display our piety.

We are not trying to cram our ideas down people's throats. If someone wants to attend the lectures, he or she can. If you are interested in learning more about the person of Jesus, I encourage you to attend one of the scheduled events and see what it is all about. But please, until you do, make no assumptions about our piety.

Amy Steanson

▶ BIKE FEES

Fees OK when used properly

Dear editor,

Using the logic that a $5 bicycle fee will encourage people to ride bicycles, is it correct to say that doubling ticket prices will make fans want to come out and support the basketball team more?

Here is the perfect solution for paying for the imaginary bike paths (or should I say extra-wide pedestrian sidewalks?) Take the money from our fees.

Why not? I don't mind having my fees pay for useful services, such as Lafene and the Rec Complex. But I am sick and tired of having my money pay for garbage like Meta-'zine, and I'm fed up with my money going to special-interest groups who bum off of SGA because they don't have the initiative to fund their own projects.

Tuition is expensive enough. Why pay useless fees? Anyone who rides a bicycle should have $5 of his or her current fees reallocated to a bicycle fund away from the current SGA slush fund. There. Everybody happy? (Besides the special-interest groups?)

Stop and think about it— a bicycle fee (implementation, bureaucracy and enforcement). How ridiculous. If the University is going to nickel and dime us to death, I hope they remember that when they grovel to us for alumni contributions. Remember that, bicycle riders.

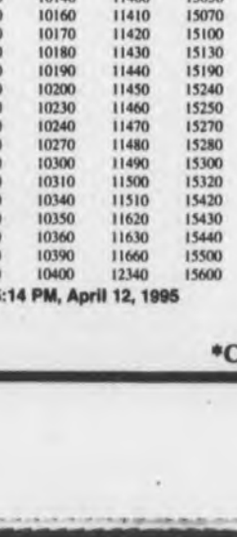
Hearing on Proposed Parking Regulations



A public hearing is scheduled for 3:00 p.m., Thursday, April 13, 1995, Big 8 Room, K-State Union. The proposed changes for FY 96 include:

a. Increase of parking permit annual fees of $5 for students and $10 for faculty staff.
b. Reserved stall costs have increased.
c. Parking lots may be closed to public on game days and special event days.
d. Driving on pedestrian walkways and sidewalks will be closely monitored and misuse fees may be assessed.
e. Misuse fees for parking in stalls signed for physically disabled may be increased to $100 in accordance with SB262, Sect. 3(b).
f. Bicycle misuse fees have been reduced to motor vehicle misuse fee amounts.
g. Appeal times have increased from five (5) to eight (8) days.
h. Vehicles having three or more delinquent parking citations and parked on campus are defined as "Excessive Violators."

The hearing is being held to receive comments about the proposed regulations.

K-State needs to find new player leadership

DEREK SIMMONS

Walking down the decorated hallway of the Vanier Football Complex last week, it suddenly hit me like a runaway linebacker.

Framed along the walls were photos of the Players of the Week — players vital in last season's 9-3 campaign, categorized game-by-game.

It was as if, walking down the hall, I was looking at the same thing. The weeks were changing, but the faces weren't.

Player of the Week — Chad May.

Player of the Week — J.J. Smith.

Player of the Week — Chad May.

Player of the Week — J.J. Smith.

And on and on and on.

I began to think about the 1996 season. I began to think about the future of K-State football. I began to think about two very crucial elements to its continued success.

Namely, who is going to throw the ball, and who is going to run the ball?

Gone are May and Smith, K-State's second all-time leading passer and all-time leading rusher. May was here just two years and Smith four.

During their tenure, K-State went from a basketball school to a football school. Simply put, pre-May/Smith football at K-State was desolate, at least as long as I've been around.

I'm not saying May and Smith combined to revive football at K-State. Two players can't do that. What I'm saying is those two, with a great supporting cast, helped take K-State football out of its death bed and into the national spotlight.

The supporting cast is still thick, awaiting someone to fill in those frames that will hang from the wall next year.

But whom?

Cody Lee Smith?

Matt Miller?

Mike Lawrence?

Eric Hickson?

Tony the Tiger?

Who knows.

These guys, except Tony, are just like May was two years ago.

Think about it. Is the May you think of now the same you thought of two years ago? Hardly. May walked into Manhattan a nobody.

He'll leave with an NFL contract and a fat check.

"Certainly whoever steps up and becomes our No. 1 guy has some big shoes to fill," Coach Bill Snyder said of the quarterback position.

No pressure here.

The top two applicants are Miller, a 1993 Texas A&M transfer, and Cody Lee Smith, a Mt. San Antonio (Calif.) Junior College transfer.

Miller is listed at the No. 1 spot, but Smith remains in California with a stomach virus. When Smith will return to Manhattan is unknown.

A two-sport athlete, Miller is taking a break from baseball to concentrate on spring drills, which started March 31 and will close with a scrimmage April 22 at 3 p.m.

Sitting out his first year at K-State as a transfer and playing a backup role to May last season, Miller has completed just four passes as a Wildcat.

"I only got in at one key time — at Colorado, and I think I did all right in a pressure situation there," said Miller, a San Diego native.

Miller hasn't exactly had a chance to prove he has big shoes.

"I only threw 12 balls all year, so I couldn't show much."

He'll get the chance this year, though.

Miller's competition for starting rights will be Smith, who is supposed to be a replica of May.

He threw for 21 touchdowns and 2,500 yards at Mt. San Antonio.

Snyder said he is less concerned with the vacancy at running back, in which sophomores Lawrence and Hickson, both from Florida, are splitting time at the No. 1 slot.

What he is concerned with, he said, is the inexperience — there are just 23 carries between the two.

"I think we have some very talented young guys in our program at that position," Snyder said.

"But we also know they have very little playing experience. And experience goes a long way," he said.

"J.J. Smith was on the field for an awful long time. It depends on how well they can make up for a lack of playing time."

What helps is the abundant talent surrounding these untested players.

The Wildcats return 16 starters from a team that compiled a 9-3 record, including 10 who earned some type of Big Eight honor.

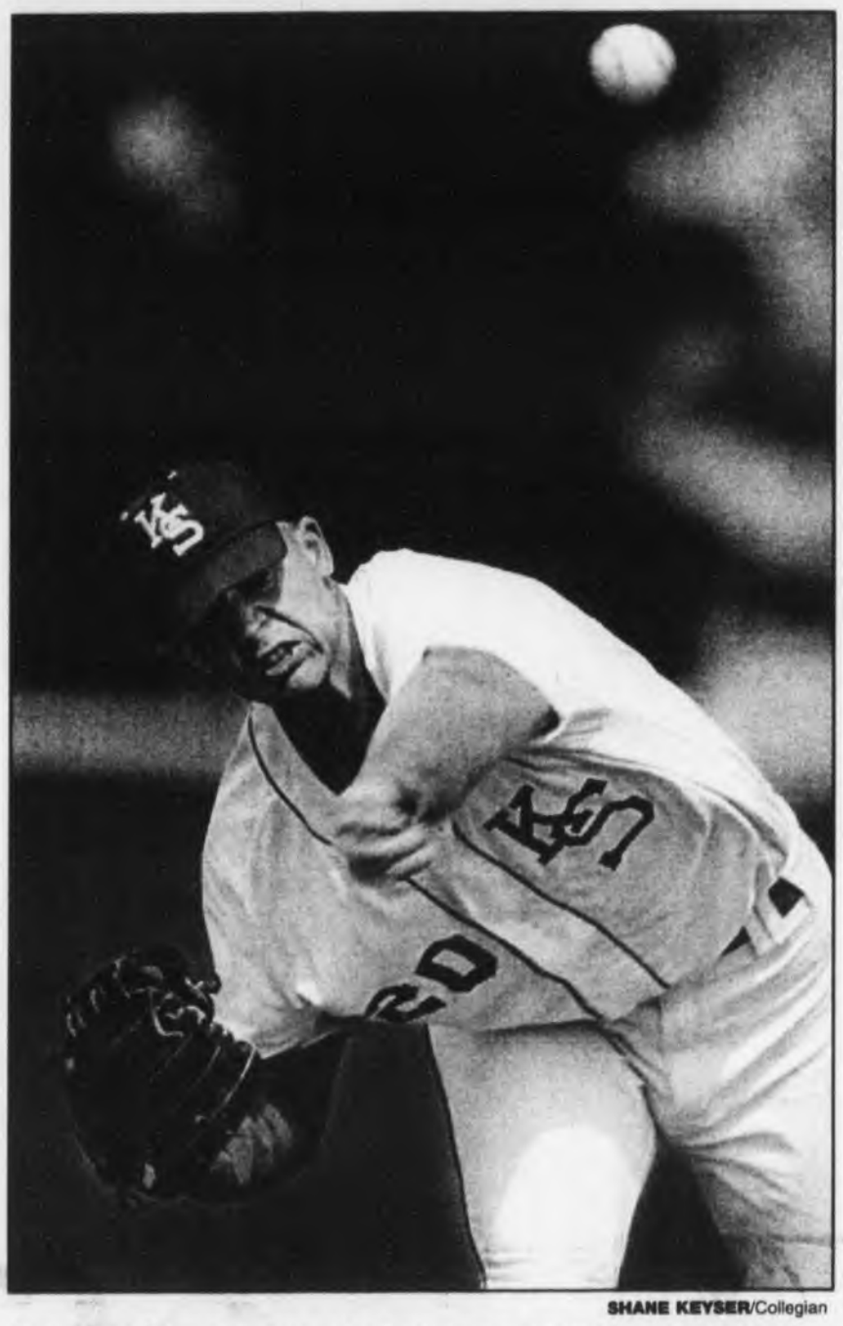
K-State has eight returning on the defense, a defense that could be the best in the league and rank high nationally.

But defense does little if your offense can't score.

Furthermore, K-State has a good group of linemen and the best receiving corps in the conference.

But those players are worthless if you don't have someone who can throw them the ball or balance the passing game with a running game.

"It's personnel-oriented. There are some very key spots in our program right now that we are hoping to be able to adequately replace," Snyder said.



"It's going to be difficult for us to go in the same direction that we have been going."

Difficult? Yes.

Impossible? No.

K-State takes 2 from Missouri

K-State doubled its victory total from last year with a double-header sweep of Missouri.

Last season, the Wildcats only won three Big Eight games, but with the two wins against Missouri, K-State improved its Big Eight record to 6-9.

"We've put together a streak of nine straight games where we've played well," K-State coach Mike Clark said.

"The kids are having fun and enjoying each other. They have a great attitude right now."

The Cats started things out slowly in the first game; Missouri took a 4-2 lead into the bottom fourth inning.

But that was when the Cats' bats woke up.

The Cats tallied runs in both the fourth and fifth innings, but they then exploded for four runs in the next two frames.

"We were able to create offense in the late innings of the first game," Clark said.

"Those runs came in a key situation."

With the Cats' bats starting to produce, K-State pitcher Matt Koeman settled down and started to throw strikes.

Koeman, who was selected the Big Eight's Pitcher of the Week, cruised on through four more innings to capture an 8-4 victory.

"It feels good to be the hottest pitcher in the league," Koeman said.

"I knew what I wanted to do before the game. With the wind blowing in, I knew that there would be good pitching conditions.

"I just had to keep my concentration and throw good pitches."

The Cats' bats continued to remain hot in the second game as K-State jumped out to a 3-0 lead on a David Hendrix home run.

Hendrix's homer landed on the roof of the Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

"It just kind of hung there," Hendrix said.

"I swung at some bad pitches in the first game, so I was more patient. I got a good pitch to hit."

K-State then jumped out to a 5-1 lead before Missouri mounted a comeback to cut the lead to 5-4.

Mizzou designated hitter Matt Nivens had a chance to give the Tigers the lead, but Heath Schesser made a diving stop on Nivens' bullet, which was heading toward left field.

"That was definitely a big-league play," Clark said.

"Heath made a big play at a big time. We had some close calls when the momentum shifted."

As the Tigers creeped within one run, K-State's offense starting producing.

In the bottom of the seventh, the Cats scored two runs on two singles and a double.

The key hit was a double by Hendrix.

Then in the eighth, the Cats added another two runs, which would cap off the final score 9-4.

Next up for the Cats is a single game against Wichita State in Salina's Dean Evans Stadium. The game is set to begin at 7 p.m.

Then K-State will battle intrastate rival Kansas in a five-game series.

"We'll be ready," Hendrix said. "Good things should happen."

Kuregian's win streak ends; netters' losing streak continues

BRIAN THOMAS
Collegian

Karina Kuregian's 10-match winning streak came to an end Wednesday afternoon.

Kansas' No. 9-ranked singles player, Nora Koves, slipped past K-State's No. 13 Kuregian 6-4, 3-6, 6-1 in Big Eight Conference tennis action at Ahearn Field House.

"We played much better today," K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau said.

"The scores showed that it was much better. Our overall effort was better. We were more competitive in spots," he said.

The first-ever meeting between the two nationally ranked singles players was a war from the start.

Kuregian, who was named the conference's Netter-of-the-Week Tuesday, struggled early and dropped the opening set 6-4.

"She started very well," Kuregian said of Koves.

"Before this match, I hadn't played people like her. She was very tough."

The Wildcat all-American settled down in the second set and pulled the match even.

Koves, 17-6, eventually wore down Kuregian in the final set to capture the victory.

"The difference was she kind of kept pressuring me," Kuregian said.

"I got a little bit tired. She's physically stronger and has more endurance. That's why I blew some points."

"She could have gone three more sets," she said.

"This was my last set. I couldn't have gone any more."

With the loss, Kuregian's record dropped to 24-6 on the season.

The match up between Kuregian and Koves overshadowed the rest of the day's action.

Earlier, Kuregian, the only conference player ranked in both the singles and doubles polls, joined No. 1 doubles partner Martine Shrubsole for an easy 6-1, 6-3 victory over the team of Koves and Bianca Kirchof.

Kuregian and Shrubsole, the No. 14-ranked doubles team in the country, improved their record to 17-2 on the season, including a 4-1 mark in conference play.

"That was one of their better matches of the year," Bietau said.

"Typically, Martine is the solid player on the court. Karina goes after it more. They served smart, and they served well. They handled the pressure every time," he said.

Bietau said he was also pleased with the performance of Karen Nicholson, who dropped a hard-fought 3-6, 6-2, 6-4 match to Kansas' Jenny Atkerson.

"I believe this was her best match in the two years she has been here," Bietau said.

"Atkerson is a quality opponent. She is one of the better players in our region. Karen managed to play well throughout the match," he said.

Tennis club gives men a chance to compete at college level

MICHELLE BELCHER
Collegian

If tennis is your game, then you might be interested in joining the K-State men's tennis club.

The men's tennis club has been in action for three years. This year it has about 20 members.

"We started the club because there is no varsity tennis team, and we were looking for people to play tennis with," said Brian Timmons, president of the men's tennis club.

The club's plans for the future include recruiting more members.

"We are always looking for new members. A lot of freshman that come in don't know about many clubs. This is a good way to get them involved," Timmons said.

Timmons said anyone interested in playing tennis can practice and join the team, but the club tries to take the top six men to tournaments.

There is a $5 membership fee to join the tennis club.

Timmons said plans for a fundraising tournament are still up in the air for next year.

"If we expect the club to grow some, we need to play more matches. The more we compete, the more publicity we get," Doug Klassen, the club's tournament director, said.

The tennis club ended its season Saturday with an 8-1 win against Nebraska Wesleyan at the Kansas City Racquet Club of Overland Park.

Timmons said he was pleased with the club's performance to end the season.

The tennis club won five of the six singles matches and all of the doubles matches it played on Saturday.

In singles, David Herr extended his personal undefeated winning streak with an easy 6-1, 6-1 win against Jason Pittack. Herr's singles record is now 3-0.Aaron Odonnell took the match 6-0, 6-0 against Wesleyan Jim Auxier. In singles, the club only dropped one match. Otto Romer took the opening set but couldn't finish off Shane Paben in a 7-5, 4-6, 4-7 loss.

In doubles, the team of Odonnell and Herr won 8-0 against the team Auxier/Pittack. The other doubles team of Timmons and Bill Forrest beat Wesleyan's Ben O'Neil and Rob Retzlaff 8-1.

Cassie: Sleeping with friend not cool

Dear Cassie,

I have a friend I have known for a very long time. He lives down the street from my family, and his mother knows my mother. They are close friends.

Every time I go home, we spend time together, and since I don't have many friends my own age left at home anymore, we spend a lot of time together.

"David" had a crush on me several years ago. I thought it was kind of cute and pretty much ignored him. But lately I have found him very attractive.

I think "David" is sweet, and I wouldn't mind sleeping with him, but I know he wouldn't understand I don't want a relationship with him. I know I would be his first. Dare I risk it?

Signed, Teased

Dear Teased,

You are definitely playing with fire. Initiating him without feeling something more than like would not be cool. Plus, if hard feelings were all involved, it would make going home hell. Don't do him.

Tree art messy; look elsewhere for better taste

For the past week, this campus has been trashed by campaign literature and other unfortunate paper products — so much that the trees are actually considering packing up and moving to Lawrence.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

If you believe that, then you probably believed much of the campaign rhetoric printed on those bastardized sons of trashy billboards. Yes, folks, those campaign signs are ugly and a nuisance, but they must exist. Because, if we happened not to see the 20 "Vote for Me Because I'm Cool" signs in front of the Union, then we will for sure see the other 1,000-odd signs scattered about the rest of campus.

I challenge all candidates in future elections to sparsely campaign with signs of high artistic quality. Let's bring some wit and craftsmanship into these signs to show students you really care. (Oh, also, I have to admit I was a part of this messy campaign junk running for Senate — but you won't hold it against me, will ya?)

Let's just hope all of the campaign material gets taken down after the elections. The last thing I think anyone wants to see are some posters which belong to a candidate who lost.

Well, I doubt campaign signs will ever gain any artistic quality to them, but the countless bachelor and master of fine arts shows do.

If you haven't been to one of the many student shows on campus, you simply must. Your fellow students are producing some fine work.

Check out the Willard Gallery, McCain Auditorium Lobby or the Union Art Gallery at any given time, and you will discover funny, thought-provoking and mysterious art.

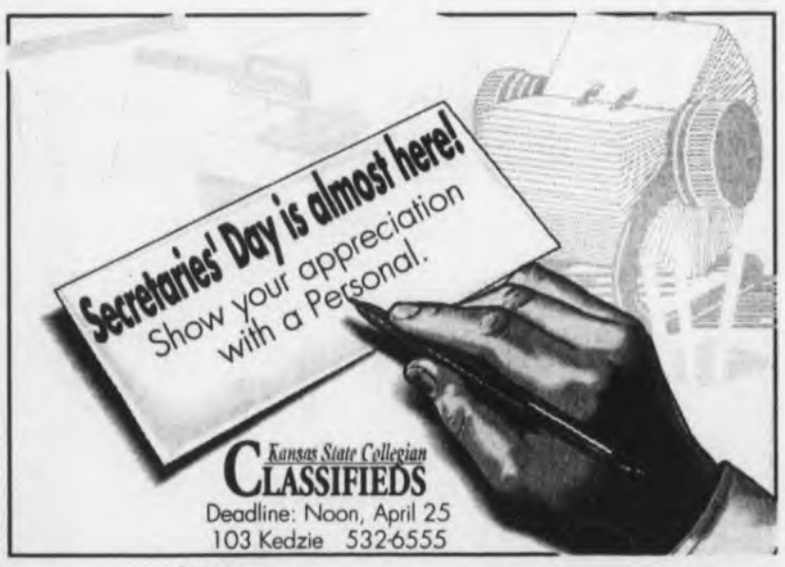
Next Monday, Coby Ellison's master of fine arts exhibit opens in the Union Art Gallery. Ellison specializes in whimsical recreations and abstractions of classical ceramics. His show will only last for one week, like all the other student solo exhibits unfortunately, so you had better make time to see it.

The Undergraduate Student Art Exhibit is on display in beautiful downtown Manhattan in Commerce Bank, 727 Poyntz Ave. Call 537-1234 for lobby hours and other information. If you want an overall view of what the best and the brightest of K-State have to offer, this exhibit should be high on your list.

The student art shows continue on through the month, so keep up your gallery visits.

If you want, you could probably take your friends to the exhibits, talk about them, and then "vote" for the exhibit you liked the best.

Of course, you might be a little wary of the endless campaigning and the tedious drone of political chitchat.



Maybe some day, one of the many talented artists on this campus will come up with the fanciful notion of creating colorful environmental art attached to innumerable campus trees. Until then, we can only imagine what large masses of papers on our trees look like.

Speaker finds humor in life

"Midwesterners are more modest. Their motto is 'No big deal.'"

CALVIN TRILLIN
New Yorker humor columnist and Convocation Lecturer

New Yorker writer expounds the variety of regional wit

CARRIE LININ
Collegian

Everyday occurrences can be humorous if given a bit of wit.

Calvin Trillin, a humor columnist for the New Yorker for more than 30 years, spoke about those humorous occurrences during his Convocation Lecture Wednesday morning at McCain Auditorium.

Trillin discussed how he explained the concept of chiggers to people back East.

"The people who live in New York, who are from the Midwest, are in New York because of chiggers," he said.

Trillin went on to describe chiggers and their effect on people in the Midwest.

"I begin with the fact that you can't see a chigger," he said. "Then, when you tell them that chiggers bite, it will itch just short of forever, and the only thing that will stop the itching is amputation, and that doesn't always work. Then they really get suspicious."

He also said people in the Midwest don't believe New York does not have chiggers.

Chigger season causes problems, and people from the Midwest need to escape, Trillin said.

Trillin said when Midwesterners travel in the summer, it's to get away from chiggers.

"When you meet someone in Paris at the top of the Eiffel Tower who is from the Midwest, the only thing they're thinking is, 'At least they don't have any chiggers here, and if they do got them here, they won't get up this high.'"

Another topic Trillin talked about was state mottoes.

"In the East, the state mottoes on license plates tend to be grandiose," he said. "New York for years has had the 'Empire State' or New Hampshire 'Live Free or Die.'

"Midwesterners are more modest," he said. "Their motto is 'No Big Deal.'"

Midwestern states have different ideas for their mottoes, Trillin said.

"In Wisconsin, the motto on the license plate became somewhat of a controversy," he said. "Some people in the state felt it didn't describe them very well. It was 'America's Dairy Land.'

"So, somebody suggested changing it to 'Eat Cheese or Die.'"

Trillin managed to tickle the funny bone of many of the audience.

"I've never read anything written by Calvin Trillin before coming to his lecture, but I was pleasantly surprised," said Becky Klenklen, senior in agricultural journalism and animal science and industry. "He was very interesting and funny."

Blue Meanies jam the ska

MIKE HILL
Collegian

Four U.S. tours met at Berlin for a show that was far beyond the typical Tuesday night.

The show started off with the group Swoon 23, from Portland, Ore.

The group had a grunge sound with a female lead vocalist who made the band sound like the Cranberries with a hard edge. Its tempo changes made for an eerie sound that seemed to mellow out the usually excited crowd.

Buck 09 took the stage next to put on the ska show most of the Berlin patrons came to see.

For those unfamiliar with ska, it consists of your usual drum, guitar and lead vocals, but it also has a small horn section often consisting of a saxophone, trumpet and trombone.

Buck 09, a San Diego-based band, almost immediately had the whole bar dancing.

Beth Grundon, senior in hotel and restaurant management, had good things to say about Buck 09.

"I really like Buck 09. They are great," she said.

The third band to play was another ska band called Blue Meanies.

The Chicago-based band Blue Meanies was the headliner of the night.

Blue Meanies played a punk/ska sound that was faster and harder than Buck 09.

With a hard-driving guitar mixed in with the horns and drums, chaos took over the stage.

The loud vocals were hard on the ears at times, but the musical skills they possessed were obvious.

The music got the few in attendance not dancing to get up and head for the dance floor.

Although Blue Meanies received the most response from the audience, Jody Kwan, senior in apparel design, said she thought they were too loud.

"I'm deaf now," she said.

Jeremy Wertz, senior in biology, said he thought they could have been better.

"They're a little more hard-core. They're not as mellow as I like," he said.

Filthy McNasty from Denver was the last band to perform Tuesday night.

The hard funk sound they had made a good ending to an exciting night.

Sleep.
Some K-State students get a lot of it. Others do not.

Story by Kimberly Hefling

Adeel Aqeel, junior in architecture, is an example of someone who does not.

"It's almost like every week there's at least one night that I don't sleep," Aqeel said. "There are times when I've gone three days in a row without sleeping."

Aqeel said as an architecture major, it is difficult to find time to sleep because he has to study and go to classes during the day and then do studio work at night.

"It's a totally different lifestyle," he said. "It's not just your major. It's your life."

Aqeel said now when he can sleep, he appreciates it more. During the school year, he has to plan ahead when he's going to sleep, he said.

"I sleep a lot in classes," Aqeel said. "It's not good, I know, but sometimes I can't help it. I get so tired."

To stay awake, Aqeel said he drinks caffeine and goes into the bathroom to splash cold water on his face.

"Late at night you start to make mistakes a lot, and it's good to take a break and then come back," he said. "But sometimes you just can't because you have a deadline."

Since coming to college, Ryan Miller, freshman in engineering, said his sleep patterns have varied every night.

"Some nights I sleep a lot," Miller said. "Some nights I don't sleep at all."

Miller said during finals this year there were several nights when he went to bed at 3 a.m. and got up at 6:30 a.m., but he said this is unusual.

"Usually, I'll cut out homework before sleep unless it's really important," he said.

Mike Carpenter, junior in life sciences, said he experimented with amphetamines a few times his freshman year to stay awake but soon learned they did more harm than good.

"I don't take them anymore," Carpenter said. "You have massive caffeine crashes, and you can't operate."

Carpenter said he got to the point where his brain wouldn't function.

"All of a sudden the caffeine is not there, and you have nothing to operate on," he said.

Carpenter said now he still only gets about six hours of sleep but is able to handle it.

"After a while, you just get calloused to it," he said.

Jocelyn Viterna, senior in sociology and Latin American studies, said there were times her freshman year when she would go for a week at a time receiving only about two hours of sleep a night, but since then she's decided more sleep is necessary.

"I wasn't very healthy," Viterna said. "I was always tired and cranky, and I didn't manage my time very well.

"Now, I still don't manage my time well, but I do get sleep."

Viterna said now she sleeps about six to seven hours a night.

"Basically, when it's midnight, unless it's really important, I just go to bed," she said. "I guess I learned that you can accomplish more in two hours if you're well rested than in eight hours when you're not."

Art Rathbun, counselor at University Counseling Services, said the amount of sleep a person needs per night varies for different people but is about eight hours on average, although it might be lower for college students.

"It varies a lot for college students because they tend to be young and energetic," Rathbun said.

Rathbun said a consistently small amount of sleep can have long-term effects.

"Psychologically, in term of abilities, a person is not going to be able to function at their peak level," Rathbun said. "When your energy level is down, it's hard to go and do what you need to do."

Physiologically, Rathbun said a person will not be able to function as well. He said it is more difficult to fight even a common cold.

Rathbun said for college students, it's not difficult to get into a pattern of staying up late to cram for a test then sleeping for a longer period of time than necessary later.

"An erratic pattern causes more difficulties because you can get your whole self out of whack," he said.

Taking short naps is not a bad thing to do, Rathbun said, but taking long naps can lead to problems.

"A little nap is not a problem, but too long of naps can affect sleep at night," he said. "When this happens, people tend to stay up later at night and get out of regular sleep patterns."

One side effect of an erratic sleep pattern for some people is procrastination, Rathbun said.

"People tend not to be as directed," he said. "They think, 'Well, maybe I'll sleep an extra half hour.' Then habit is extended from taking naps to a change in the sleeping pattern."

Kevin Johnston, sophomore in fine arts, said he receives more sleep now that he's come to college.

"I take naps now. I never used to nap," he said. "I'm a changed man."

Johnston said he takes about three short naps a day.

"I'm lazy now," Johnston said. "There's nothing else to do besides sleep."

Although he does not get more sleep than before he came to college, Kris Robl, sophomore in criminology, said he has a very structured sleep schedule on the weekdays and does not have problems getting sleep.

▶ NATIVE AMERICAN HISTORY

Spoken word is powerful, poetry in life

Kiowa novelist tells tribe's story ancient traditions

SARA SMITH
Collegian

The tradition of the spoken word is the most powerful force in human history, a Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist said Wednesday.

N. Scott Momaday spoke to an audience packed into Union Forum Hall.

He said at the outset of his speech that although he is a novelist, painter, professor and playwright, he calls himself a poet.

"I consider myself a poet. I think most people who think of me at all think of me as a novelist, but the truth is that I have written two novels. I think I am entitled to call myself a poet," said Momaday, who is a member of the Kiowa nation.

Momaday began his speech by telling about how hot the weather was for him when he first moved to Tucson, Ariz., so he got a house with air conditioning and a swimming pool.

He wrote poetry while swimming laps.

"Swimming laps is one of the most boring activities man has ever invented. I think it's on a par with jogging," he said.

Momaday recited two of the epitaphs he wrote while swimming laps, telling the audience to keep in mind that he was totally wet while composing them in his head.

"The Minor Writer" (a two-lap epitaph)
Certainly it was suicide
He read himself until he died.

"On Chastity" (a four-lap epitaph)
Here lies a lady
Sweet and chaste
Here lies the matter
Chaste makes waste.

Momaday then told two stories. The first one was about a blind man in Buenos Aires who was a librarian.

"Imagine — books and blindness. Here is an equation that seems hopeless," Momaday said.

Momaday said there was nothing more powerful than the fourth dimension of language, which is older than writing. That dimension is the oral tradition, or the spoken word.

"In the history of the world, nothing has been more powerful," he said.

Momaday said the blind man still led a life enriched by language.

"It is no wonder he found all color and brilliance in words and language," he said.

The second story he told was about talking to an old woman, a woman who was so old she wasn't sure of her age, who had been present at the last Kiowa Sundance, the sacred dance of many Native American peoples.

"It was like a dream. When I was born, she was already old. It did not seem possible to me that so many years — a century — could be so compacted and distilled," Momaday said.

Momaday recalled asking the woman to tell her how the Sundance started that day.

He said the woman told him not to ask, that nobody knew about that. She then told him the story in great detail.

"'Oh, grandson, you know I was just a girl,'" Momaday said, quoting the woman from memory.

The old woman told him of being awakened by her sisters in the morning of the Sundance. Her sisters told her to make an offering.

"'But I have nothing to give. I have nothing.'" Momaday said the old woman's sister gave her a colorful ribbon, which she gave as an offering.

The dance began after men brought the head of a buffalo on a stake and an old woman brought a bag of earth for the dancers to dance on in the lodge.

That old woman began to sing, saying, "Now it is time to play. As old as I am, I still have the feeling of play."

The old woman in the story told Momaday, "That was how it began. That is how it always began."

Momaday went on to speak in praise of books, saying that they were the realization of the human experience in the realm of ideas.

"The book is a wonderful invention, that is, the book as we know it, and I'm talking about the printed book," he said.

Momaday said the printed book was a modern phenomenon when compared to how long writing has been around.

"Writing is about 6,000 years old as far as we know," he said.

Momaday said he considered it amazing that the same printing press that printed the "Bay Psalm Book" in the English colonies was used to print a complete translation of the Bible in the Algonquin language.

"It is the miracle of language that enables us," he said.

Melissa Pamperin, freshman in theater, said she came to see Momaday after hearing about him in her cultural anthropology class.

"I think he's very charismatic," Pamperin said.

She said she thought Momaday's speech was entertaining because it was presented in a humorous, informal way.

"The way he speaks draws you in," she said. "His stories were amazing."

N. Scott Momaday, a Pulitzer-Prize winning novelist, spoke to a large crowd at Forum Hall in the K-State Union Wednesday night.

Sleep can be found in old-time cures

"I get seven hours of sleep every night," he said.

"I go to bed at 1:30 in the morning and get up at 8."

Robl said he does not takes naps.

"I don't sleep during the day because it will make me so I can't sleep at night," he said.

Robl said he has never pulled an all-nighter, and he never will because he does not believe that is an effective way to study.

"I'd have to sleep for three days to get back on track," Robl said.

Rathbun said he sees about 10 to 15 students a semester who do not have problems finding time to sleep but suffer from insomnia.

To treat insomnia, Rathbun said some old-fashioned remedies are successful.

Rathbun said doing things such as drinking warm milk before going to bed can help combat insomnia. In addition, Rathbun said he recommends establishing a winding-down pattern before going to bed. The counseling center also offers relaxation training, he said.

Tombs, Blair and Bassett announce their runoff choices

Even though that luck ran out for the brothers, Andrew told his supporters that the campaign was worth the effort.

"We had a lot of fun doing it. I think we had a lot more fun than any of the other campaigns," he said.

Both Tombs immediately gave their support to incumbents Peterson and Brad Finkeldei.

"We gave it our best shot," Mark, sophomore in economics, said to the group. "I completely support Jeff Peterson."

Andrew said they will campaign for Peterson until the runoff.

He said he hopes Peterson will continue discussing the issues, primarily the issue of encouraging students to register to vote in Manhattan.

Mark said Peterson is registered to vote locally.

Supporter Miranda Kennedy, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications, said Ring isn't even registered to vote in Kansas.

Kennedy questioned how Ring can represent the student body to the Kansas Legislature if she isn't even registered to vote in the state.

Ring has said she is a registered voter in her home state, Nebraska.

No regrets.

Those were the words Jeremy Blair, junior in marketing, and Doug Bassett, sophomore in public relations, used to describe their feelings on the presidential election.

But the tension before the phone call was high, Chris Bosco, junior in grain science and milling, said.

"Two have already died, one is in intensive care, and the rest of us are about ready to go," Bosco said.

After a series of calls, the call came in around 11:10 p.m.

The room went silent.

Blair asked to have it given to him straight; he could take it.

Blair took in 9.8 percent of the vote, a few votes behind Tomb.

After the announcement, Blair and Bassett announced they would endorse Liz Ring and Paul Friedrichs.

"Liz was best after us," Blair said.

Blair and Bassett both said they believe low voter turnout was not the issue and that the proportion of votes would have fell the same even if more voters would have turned out.

"We were just two students running for student government," Bassett said. "We don't have all the affiliations to support us."

Blair said most of their following came from off campus, and there was a lot of apathy from that group.

Blair said he and Bassett had discussed the possibility of a runoff before the election. They wanted it all or nothing. So even though they were disappointed not to be in the runoff, they were glad they weren't part of it.

"We did it justice, and that is how everyone should run their campaigns," Blair said.

Beyond color toward unity

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Americans need to grasp the difference between problems and enemies, William Raspberry, Washington Post columnist, said.

"We've lost the ability to make the separation. We adore having enemies because it makes us self-righteous," Raspberry said.

Raspberry spoke Thursday in McCain Auditorium for the 101st Landon Lecture.

Raspberry said confronting problems can cause a change, but having enemies can lead people to be sought out, branded and punished.

"It's us against them," he said. "If you give us a problem, we'll find an enemy. When the U.S. economy was in trouble, Japan was the enemy."

To solve our nation's problems, we need to step back and take a look from a distance so we can have a clearer understanding of our country, Raspberry said.

"If we learn to see our country from a distance, maybe we'll learn that we have greater similarities and trivial differences and we can get our act together," Raspberry said.

In his lecture, Raspberry also addressed the issue of affirmative action.

"White men with a high-school education may be less secure economically than their fathers were, but it's a mistake to think that their jobs were handed to black people in the name of affirmative action," he said.

Raspberry said the jobs were instead sent overseas or lost in the smoke of corporate mergers and downsizing.

He also focused on racism and how progression of the civil-rights movement has weakened since the death of Martin Luther King Jr.

"We say we want things to get better, but we have to come together as brother and sister," he said. "We have to bring blacks and whites together because we all have a shared status as Americans."

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said he agreed with Raspberry's lecture but thought it had hints of idealism.

"I think he has a different vantage point because he looks at America and the world through the eyes of a journalist," Franklin said. "I do believe we can

Senators defeat bill to move up election day

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Senate failed to pass a bill that would have moved student government elections to two weeks before spring break next year.

The original bill proposed by the Senate Operations Committee moved SGA elections up from the second full week of April to the first full week of April.

Senate parliamentarian and Operations Committee member John Potter said one reason for the proposed move was to allow for a longer transition period for the new executive, judicial and legislative members.

Sarah Engler, arts and sciences senator, said she did not see any reason why the elections could not be moved to the first week of April. She said senators could just work harder and begin campaigning sooner if spring break would be a problem.

"I've seen three transitions," Bill Muir, faculty representative, said. "And with all your good intentions, it is a cluster you-know-what."

Muir presented an amendment that moved the elections to the week before spring break in March. His amendment would have pushed the runoff election, if needed, to the week following spring break.

Casey Carlson, business senator, said she thought there needed to be more time for transition.

She said when she found out she had been selected as a committee chair, she was already packed to move home for the summer. She had no time to ask questions or to confer with Clayton Wheeler, Senate chair, she said.

Muir agreed. Since runoffs have become an expected part of the election, there has not been time for the new administration to get settled in and the new positions filled before finals.

"Let everyone get organized before we go home," Muir said.

Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, amended the by-law revision again by moving the election to two weeks before spring break and the runoffs to the week before spring break. Her amendment also passed.

A two-thirds majority is needed to pass a by-law revision, or 40 in favor. When the final vote was taken, there were 38 in favor and 17 opposed.

Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator, proposed a resolution to create a University-Wide State Affairs Committee.

The resolution requires President Jon Wefald to create a campus-wide committee to increase communication between the administration and the students of K-State on legislative issues.

▶ EASTER

Dye-hard Wildcat fans color their eggs purple

JAMIE CONGROVE

Some students' favorite ways to decorate Easter eggs incorporate swirls, polka dots and the colors pink and purple.

Every year around this time, people rush out to the store to stock up on their fair share of eggs to get into the Easter spirit.

In fact, last year Dillons came close to running out of eggs, said Todd Redd, grocery manager of the Dillons on Sarber Lane.

"We have to order more eggs around this time of year. We always have enough to get us through, but there is not much left over," Redd said.

So what do students do once they get their eggs home?

"We boiled so many Easter eggs to decorate, we had to eat them for weeks afterward," said Mariah Tanner, sophomore in family sciences and human services in economics.

One student said he had the misfortune of forgetting to boil his egg and had to find out the hard way how to dye eggs.

"One Easter back in the '80s, I had a big bowl full of purple dye, and I forgot to boil the egg, and it broke. So I had to throw all of that dye out," Willie Vader, junior in biology, said.

Vader said his favorite color of egg dye is purple.

"I like purple because I'm a die-hard K-State fan," he said.

Although his devotion to K-State runs thick, Vader said he has never tried to draw a Powercat on an egg before.

Anne Liebengood, freshman in family studies and human services, said her favorite colors for Easter eggs are pink and white with pink polka dots.

"I also like the eggs where you can take a special crayon and write and draw things on it, then dip it into the dye, and when it comes out, you can see what you created," she said.

Another student said she likes the eggs that are dyed with swirls.

"I like the ones that go swirly, swirly. And I'm really good at

Senator wins seat by using nickname

WADE ANDERSON

A new business senator said he owes his position to his nickname.

John Potter, sophomore in finance and political science, added his nickname, "Colonel," to his name in the Collegian Voters' Guide.

"I'm positive that without the 'Colonel' being used in my name, I wouldn't have gotten enough votes to get a position," Potter said.

"I got the nickname last year on the K-State Debate Team," he said.

Both Potter and Michael Reilly received 137 votes, which was enough to get them the last two Senate seats for the College of Business.

Potter is also the Senate's parliamentarian.

"I think being the Senate parliamentarian was a good reason why I got in," he said.

Jon Perez, sophomore in accounting, was on the other side of the coin. He missed being a senator by seven votes.

Perez said he was frustrated.

"I put a lot of work into it, but all my friends are engineers, and they couldn't vote for me," he said.

Perez said he is not in the greek system.

"I think being in the greek system helps," he said.

Perez said he was thinking about applying for SGA treasurer.

Jill Hayhurst, freshman in speech pathology, earned a seat on Senate by receiving the second most votes for the College of Human Ecology.

Hayhurst said she was a Senate intern this year.

"When I was an intern, I met a lot of human ecology people who guided me in ways of getting elected," she said.

"I was very surprised and excited to be elected and be just four votes away from first, especially since I finished ahead of an incumbent senator," she said.

Write-ins fill open slots

AMY SIMON

Instead of filling in the circles, many students listed write-in candidates during this week's student body election.

Chad Schneiter, Elections Committee chairman, said there were write-in candidates in all of the races.

Three races this year had open slots. There were positions open for veterinary medicine senator, education senator and Union Governing Board two-year term.

Lisa Wicoff, junior in secondary education, wrote in a candidate for education senator because there weren't enough people on the ballot.

She said write-in campaigns are usually unsuccessful.

"I don't know why you would really want to run as a write-in anyway," Wicoff said. "It is so much harder."

Rob Raney, junior in mechanical engineering, wrote in a candidate for engineering senator because he knew few people on the ballot.

Two votes separated the last person to make Arts and Science Council and the two who did not.

Becky Jueneman, freshman in journalism and mass communications, won the last spot on the Arts and Science Council.

"Every vote does count; this situation proves it," Jueneman said.

"I was surprised. Since I'm a freshman, I didn't know what to expect," she said.

Jueneman said she has served on the council in the last few months because three members on the council were impeached.

Jueneman said she was somewhat skeptical about running.

"I didn't know many people because I haven't been in the college long," she said.

Sonya Koo, freshman in biochemistry, was one of the two

▶ RETIRED ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF PHYSICAL EDUCATION DIES AT 91

A retired K-State physical-education instructor died Monday at the Meadowlark Hills Retirement Center in Manhattan.

Katherine Geyer, 91, joined K-State as an instructor in 1927. Seven years later, she became an associate professor, and in 1945, she was placed in charge of the women's physical-education program. She retired after 47 years of service at K-State in 1974.

Larry Noble, professor and head of the department of kinesiology, said he had known Geyer since 1972 and she will be missed.

"Katherine was very smart in stature," he said. "She had a great sense of humor."

David Laurie, associate professor in secondary education, said he has known Geyer for 40 years, and she once taught him in class.

"I've never met anyone in my lifetime that volunteered for anything as much as she did," he said. "She was really unbelievable."

Katheryn McKinney, a friend of Geyer's, said she was also a student of Geyer's and later joined her on staff in the physical-education department.

She said Geyer had many friends and all of them would have something nice to say about her.

"She was very highly thought of," McKinney said. "She was quite a leader."

Geyer volunteered at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Manhattan Garden Club, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, Phi Sigma Chi and the Riley County American Red Cross.

While at K-State, Geyer was elected twice to serve on Faculty Senate and was the first woman to serve on the Athletic Committee, Faculty Council, Faculty Council on Student Affairs, Student Union Planning Committee, Apportionment Board, Panhellenic Council Advisor and the Reinstatement Committee.

Some of her achievements include being named a Fellow of the American Association of Health, being a president and honor award recipient of the Kansas Association of Health, being a member of the honorary teacher's society and the National Association for the Physical Education of College Women.

There will be a memorial service for Geyer at 2 p.m. Monday at the Irvin-Parkview Funeral Home. Internment will be at a later date.

Memorial contributions can be made in care of the funeral home to the Sunset Zoological Park and the Wildlife Conservation Trust.

▶ 2 INJURED WHILE TRYING TO CATCH POP FLY IN INTRAMURAL BALLGAME

Two K-State students were injured Thursday evening during an intramural softball game between the Bats and Gloves and the Blueballs at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Bats and Gloves teammates Randy Clydesdale, senior in agricultural business, and Robin Hedke, junior in journalism and mass communications, were attempting to catch a pop fly when their heads collided near third base at about 7:10 p.m.

"They were both looking up at the foul ball, then they hit each other and dropped," teammate Martin Lane, who witnessed the accident, said.

"He's got a cut on his head from her mouth and teeth, but I think she got the worst of the collision," Lane, a senior in horticulture, said.

Both students were told to stay motionless as Steve Lloyd, the Rec's certified trainer, applied first aid. Riley County EMS appeared on the scene at 7:20 p.m.

Hedke suffered cuts to the left side of her jaw and was bleeding from the mouth. She was taken to the Saint Mary Hospital for treatment and x-rays.

Clydesdale suffered a swollen right eye and a two-inch cut above his eye. He refused treatment from EMS, deciding instead to go to Lafene Health Center.

"I've been here three years, and we've only had to call the ambulance twice," Bryan Skinner, assistant director of intramurals, said. "You just hope something like this never happens, but with athletics, you never know."

Skinner noted the quick response and assistance of his intramural employees, especially Lloyd.

"I was very pleased with our effort," he said.

"All of our employees have first-aid training, and we always have a certified trainer on hand at all times. In this case, it was Steve," Skinner said.

▶ JAPANESE AUTO INDUSTRY COULD FACE PUNITIVE TARIFFS ON IMPORTS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration has decided to wage an all-out assault on the heart of Japan's industrial might, its auto industry, in what could turn into the most bruising trade battle of all between the world's two largest economies.

Administration officials said the president's National Economic Council has given the go-ahead to drawing up a target list of more than $1 billion in Japanese imports that could be subject to punitive tariffs of 100 percent if the two countries fail to agree in current talks.

The list of potential targeted products will be released in early May if talks have not made significant progress by that time. The sanctions would go into effect after a 30-day public-comment period, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The dispute involves efforts to open Japan's market for autos and auto parts, a sector that accounted for more than 60 percent of last year's record $66-billion U.S. trade deficit with Japan. Japanese automakers have fought fiercely for years to protect their home market.

The administration's decision follows months of internal debate. One side argued that the hardline bargaining stance the administration

THURSDAY, APRIL 13

At 1:22 a.m., an officer reported he found a vehicle in B-16 with a window broken. He contacted the owner, John Bates of 607 Marlatt Hall. Bates discovered that an unknown suspect or suspects had taken the car stereo, tools and box when they broke the window. The loss was estimated at $600.

At 2:38 a.m., Paul Colwell, staff at Moore Hall, reported a subject at the edge of a window at Moore Hall. An officer responded, but the subject had crawled back into the room. The report said all was quiet at the residence hall.

At 8:33 a.m., the Department of Finance, in Calvin 117D, reported a missing IBM computer. The loss was $3,427.

At 11:53 a.m., Rod Hodges, University employee, reported a loss of radios and chargers from Ahearn 8A. Estimated cost was $1,600.

At 9:41 p.m., Kelly Thomas of 230 Moore Hall reported a car fire in Lot B-3 behind Weber Arena. The Manhattan Fire Department and K-State police reported to the scene. The fire occurred when parties attempted to jump-start their vehicle. The fire was put out.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12

At 8:13 p.m., Cindy Staffel, management of Play It Again Sports at 1115 Westloop, filed a theft report. A 20-inch freestyle boy's bicycle and a redline bra were taken. The serial numbers of the products were unavailable. Lost was estimated at $125.

At 9:43 p.m., Dana Chandler of 1119 Laramie St., Apt. 3, reported an unknown hit and run in the Dillon's Westloop parking lot. Chandler's parked and unattended vehicle received minor damages. A private property report was filed.

THURSDAY, APRIL 13

At 1:11 a.m., Mary Sheridan of 1216 Colorado St. reported a house on fire at 917 Colorado St. The Manhattan Fire Department and Riley County Police responded. An arson report was filed.

At 2:58 a.m., Patricia Martinez of 730 Allen Road, Lot 130, reported a wallet with miscellaneous items taken from 1315 Laramie St. at Fast Eddy's. She declined to file a report.

At 3:27 a.m., a building at 1126 Laramie St. was broken into. An officer was unable to contact management. A burglary report was filed.

At 12:39 p.m., Scott Easton, management of Burger King at 301 Poyntz Ave., reported taken and recovered $650 cash and checks. Items taken included a brown lockable money bag valued at $20.

Professor stresses power of education

Speaker offers tips for overcoming negative images

MELINDA CARTER
Collegian

African American males are not liabilities, a K-State professor said during a symposium Thursday.

"I am an asset, and so are all of us," said James Boyer, professor in foundations and adult education at K-State.

Boyer spoke Thursday at the African American Male Symposium conducted in the Union Little Theatre.

African American males need to be proud and strong in the workplace, schools, homes and churches, Boyer said.

He said there are three things that black males need to do to fight the negative connotations associated with them today.

"We need to polish our image," Boyer said.

Black males also need to be the ones who speak for themselves, and they need to announce that they are not violent people, he said.

Boyer said the symposium offered a chance to allow the men to talk about and hear how good they are and to encourage one another.

"Our job is to counteract what American media and corporate institutes are saying about us," he said.

Boyer said the main way to fight the public's perception is through education.

Fred Watson, professor of history at K-State, said information is also crucial to success.

"Information is power. Without it, you can't succeed," Watson said.

After viewing a film that encouraged black males to focus on the positive occurrences in the lives of other black males, there was a time for open discussion.

Some students were upset with law enforcement and its suspicion of black males. Others said they couldn't improve on their educational foundation without funds for college.

Both Boyer and Watson pledged to assist any students with information regarding college enrollment or financial assistance.

The morning session of the African American Male Symposium ended early enough for the students to attend William Raspberry's Landon Lecture.

Before the session ended, Watson encouraged the young men to do as much as possible to learn their heritage.

"This will enable you to understand yourself and what's in your soul," he said.

▶ INTERNATIONAL CULTURE

Taiwanese culture to be showcased

JANET GILLILAND
Collegian

K-State and the Manhattan community will have the opportunity to sample the Taiwanese culture Saturday night.

The first Taiwanese Culture Night will be Saturday at the Manhattan Middle School.

Ming-tie Huang, graduate student in physics, said to start off the evening, there will be a dinner from 6 to 7:30 p.m.

The dinner tickets are $5 and can be purchased at the door or at the International Student Center.

"Everyone is welcome to attend the dinner and the events that will follow," Huang said.

He said there will be some homemade Taiwanese food.

After the dinner, there will be an exposition until 7:30 p.m.

"During the exposition, there will be some paintings, art and traditional dress to look at," Huang said.

The cultural show will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Manhattan Middle School Auditorium.

Huang said the program for the cultural show will consist of a slide show about the scenery, history, economics, politics, folk art and holidays of Taiwan.

"You can attend the cultural show for free if you just come to it and not to the dinner," Huang said.

The show will also include traditional dance, music, martial arts, vocal music and a traditional dress show.

"I am helping with the cultural show preparations. I will be helping the people get ready backstage,"said Ching-Yi Lin, graduate student in business administration.

"Even though this is the first Taiwanese culture night, there have been quite a lot of people buying tickets already, and we hope to sell more," Huang said.

CULTURE NIGHT

The first Taiwanese Culture Night will be from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Middle School at Ninth Street and Poyntz Avenue.

Lin said they have probably already sold about 400 tickets.

"The purpose of the cultural night is to show our cultural things and to show the difference between Taiwanese and Chinese," Lin said.

Huang said Taiwanese Cultural Night is a chance for students of all cultures to sample Taiwan.

"I want to encourage everyone to buy tickets and come because we want to share our culture with everybody at K-State," Huang said.

Legislators will attempt to reach compromise on motor-vehicle tax cuts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Lawmakers plan to make another stab at reaching a compromise on motor-vehicle tax reductions when they reconvene April 26.

But Rep. Phill Kline, R-Shawnee, chairman of the House Taxation Committee, said he is not optimistic a compromise can be reached.

"We're not going to give up," said Sen. Audrey Langworthy, R-Prairie Village, chairwoman of the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee.

The last proposal lawmakers talked about could cost public schools in Kansas almost $100 million, Deputy Education Commissioner Dale Dennis said.

That plan would remove the state's 35-mill property tax levy from vehicles over three years.

Dennis told the State Board of Education the plan would cost the local school districts a total of $96 million annually by the fourth year.

The proposal, developed on Friday just before the Legislature adjourned its regular session, would have reduced the statewide levy that raises money for schools from 35 mills to 30 mills the first year.

It would decrease the mill levy to 23 mills the second year and repeal the levy altogether the third year.

"That's a problem," Langworthy said. "When you reduce taxes, you either have to cut spending somewhere, in this case its school districts, or shift taxes somewhere else."

Senate and House Republicans could not reach a compromise on how much of a tax break to give owners of cars, vans and pickups after passing different versions of a bill.

The Senate's version would reduce motor-vehicle taxes over a 10-year period by reducing the tax assessment rate from 30 percent of appraised value to 15 percent.

Debate team advances to nationals, places in top 64

MELINDA CARTER
Collegian

The K-State Debate Team returned from nationals April 3 after having one of its two teams place in the final round.

K-State sent two teams to nationals at San Diego State University.

One team consisted of Courtney Knapple, sophomore in speech, and Isaac West, freshman in political science and speech.

Knapple and West advanced in the competition after defeating Macalester College from St. Paul, Minn., but ended their debate after losing to the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

"We debated really well," West said. "I just think there were some barriers that we couldn't overcome."

West said he and Knapple were a young team.

He said although he was pleased with their performance, he didn't go into the competition expecting to win.

Knapple also said she thought their team did well considering their ages.

"I was real excited because for a sophomore and freshman team, we did real well," she said.

Lori Davis, freshman in speech, and Grant Denny, freshman in political science, also attended nationals, but they did not place in the finals.

Of the 250 teams in the tournament, Knapple and West placed in the top 64.

Susan Stanfield, director of debate at K-State, said each year all of the students trying for nationals are given the same topic to research.

This semester's topic was ocean development.

Knapple said she wasn't hopeful about the topic initially.

"I wasn't that optimistic at first," Knapple said.

In addition to having a class that meets twice a week, the debaters also have to spend a lot of time preparing.

"They spend a lot of time in the library, writing arguments and things like that," Stanfield said.

"We probably spend between 30 and 40 hours per week preparing," West said.

Both West and Knapple spent their spring breaks studying for nationals.

"Both of us stayed through spring break and went out there a couple of days early to practice," Knapple said.

West and Knapple both said they intend to debate next year as well.

Check out K-State's winning baseball team

Can you think of a better way to spend Easter weekend than watching the Cats demolish the Hawks?

We want to let you in on a little secret. It's about the K-State baseball team.

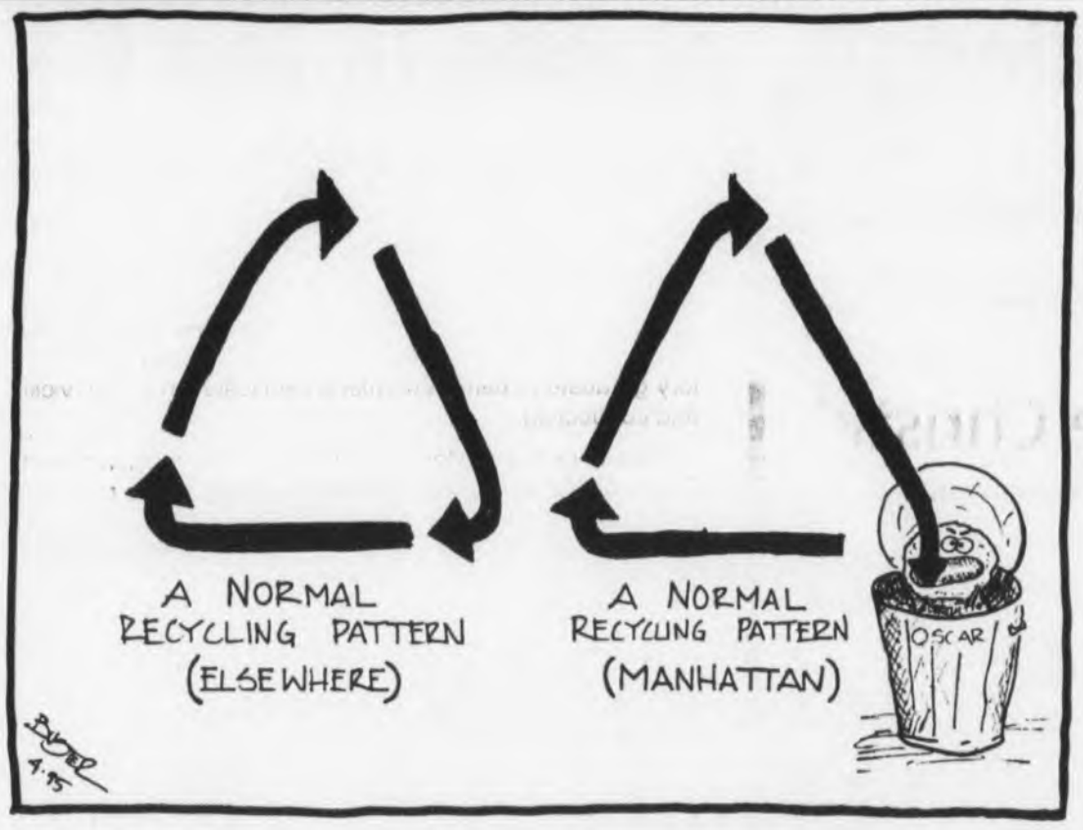
The Wildcats are quietly putting together a solid baseball season in which wins instead of losses are starting to be the norm.

Coach Mike Clark's Wildcats have been a thrilling team to watch this season, whether they were coming back to win in extra innings against Nebraska or sweeping the defending national champion, the Oklahoma Sooners. Attending a game at Frank Myers Field has been an electrifying experience.

K-State is in fifth place in the Big Eight Conference and has a chance to move into fourth place after this weekend. But what makes this even better is that the Kansas Jayhawks are coming to town. Can you think of a better way to spend Easter weekend than watching the Cats demolish the Hawks?

We certainly can't.

We, the students and faculty members, need to show our support for the Wildcat baseball team.



Can you imagine what Frank Meyers Field would be like if it was packed to capacity? Not only would it pump up the team, but a packed stadium would show those snobs down the river that K-State means business.

Game time is set for 7 p.m. Saturday and 3 p.m. Sunday. So grab a family member or a friend and head out to the ball diamond to cheer the Cats on to victory.

Learning family traditions, taking over roles and responsibilities all part of growing up

GUEST COLUMN

Two years ago, I woke to the sound of screaming.

It was almost 8 a.m., nearly two hours before I would get up to go to work.

I ran into the living room to find Mother on her knees, dressed only in her slip, screaming, "No," over and over.

I noticed my Siamese cat laying at her feet, and somewhere in my still-asleep brain, I figured something must be wrong with the cat.

Then Mom handed me the phone, and my aunt informed me Grandma had died of a massive heart attack just a little while earlier.

I mark that day as the day I grew up.

Through the entire previous year, my folks had gone through a nasty divorce. I was struggling with a father gripped by alcoholism, and my mother, sister and I had just moved from a four-bedroom house into a tiny two-bedroom apartment that could have fit into our old living room with space to spare.

I considered myself pretty mature. Pretty grown-up.

But the day Dorothy Ann Elaine Mog died was the day I became an adult.

Mom was too involved in her grief to function, so I made the plans to go to Chanute, changed those plans to accommodate my sister taking the ACT the next day, called Mom's work, her friends and her realtor, and tracked down my father in Texas.

It wasn't until many hours later, when I was standing in the shower, that I was able to cry. There just hadn't been time before.

When we buried my grandmother a few days later, I found it hard to walk through her house, because I expected her to pop out of the kitchen any minute or come downstairs to show off her latest painting.

The death couldn't have come at a worse time.

We had leaned on the family to help us get through the divorce. Grandma had gone through her own divorce almost four decades earlier, and the family had closed its ranks around us to try and help us through our pain.

Her death opened a new hole during an already difficult year.

Through the past two years, the pain has eased somewhat. Although I haven't been able to bring myself to visit her grave, I can now joke about Grandma.

Over break we had a good laugh about how the three of us have inherited her characteristics. Sometimes, when Mom's lecturing me, I hear phrases pop out of her mouth that I heard a hundred times from Grandma.

Last week, my world shook again with another phone call.

I thanked God this wasn't another death, yet it upset me almost as much.

Mom told me she'd been to the doctor and was going to have to undergo a hysterectomy in May.

I've had a while to think about it now.

Logic tells me the operation will be fine and she'll be fine. Logic tells me the operation is the only way to solve her health problems.

Logic tells me not to let her know how scared I am, because she's scared enough.

Logic tells me many things, but logic isn't going under the knife. My mother is.

I watched my mother cope with her mother's death, and I know I'm too young to do the same.

My grandmother won't be at my wedding and will never hold her great-grandchildren, but I will feel doubly cheated if my mother isn't there and doesn't get to spoil the hell out of her grandchildren.

I've learned everything that's important through the women in my family, and I've learned that family is the most important thing of all.

If my mother dies at age 69, the same age as my grandmother, then I will have had 50 years to be with her, and I will feel blessed.

But to lose her at age 42, when I'm only 23, would be too much to bear.

I know that she's wishing her mother was here now, to help her through this.

All I can do is be her daughter, be there when she goes under and help her as much as I can after the surgery.

And all the while, I will try not to think about the fact she's drawing up a will before she goes into surgery.

I'll try not to think about the fact that I will be the executor of that will.

I'll try not to think about the fact that she's drawing up a power of attorney, and if something goes wrong, it will fall on me to make the decisions.

Mothers and daughters. I've learned everything that's important through the women in my family, and I've learned that family is the most important thing of all. My family is the sum of everything I am.

I'm praying that I won't lose yet another piece of myself.

▶ FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Most people do earn way

Dear editor,

In last Thursday's edition of the Collegian, Jay Goodwin, a sophomore in political science, was quoted as saying that he "wasn't bothered by the proposed financial aid cuts" in the Republicans' Contract with America. He said, "You have to earn it (college). It's not a gimme."

This statement would seem to imply that everyone who needs financial aid in order to attend a university has not earned it.

As a non-traditional single parent, I take extreme exception to that remark. I spent a number of years working at $5 an hour jobs (that's around $800 a month gross pay) while trying to raise two small children. This was in a small town, so my rent was a mere one-third of my gross income, about $275.

Other expenses for three people included utilities ($150), transportation ($100), food ($200), clothing and day care after school (a whopping $120).

Of course, with such a huge income, I did not qualify for food stamps or welfare, and only minimal child-care assistance.

I was an A student when I graduated from high school, and I decided I could do better with my life. So, thanks to the existence of Pell Grants and Stafford Loans, I was able to return to school, taking 18 to 21 hours per semester at a community college while working 20 hours per week.

In fact, I did so well that after the first year I earned enough scholarships so that I didn't need Stafford Loans until I came to K-State. That was more than six years ago.

Now, I have completed both bachelor's and master's degrees in biology, and I am working on my doctoral degree.

During the course of my education, I have had considerable experience teaching, both here, on campus, and in off-campus courses.

I have found that there are many reasons for students' inability to read and write complete sentences, and very few of those have to do with whether they receive financial aid.

Look to the open-admissions policy if you want to find answers to your questions about the quality of students attending this University.

Mr. Goodwin, have you ever taken 20 hours per semester, worked 20 hours per week, then gone home to a full-time job as a parent?

Have you ever gotten up at 4 a.m. to study for a calculus exam because you were too exhausted after putting the kids in bed to stay awake?

Are you paying your own way to college, or are your parents footing the bill?

Would you be here if you had to pay for it yourself?

Have you earned your way?

Debra Welch graduate student in biology

▶ LANDON LECTURE

Students certainly can go

Dear editor,

In response to Tuesday's editorial: "Students need chance to see Landon Lecture."

Class attendance policy is a faculty prerogative. Most faculty will release students on an individual basis to attend particular Landon Lectures or Convocations.

From a practical point of view, there are at least 5,000 students who are not scheduled to be in class or laboratories at any given hour, even the most popular hours in the mid-morning. (Total available class and laboratory capacity is 14,494 at any one time.) If even half of the students who are not scheduled for class were able to attend a lecture, McCain Auditorium would be overwhelmed (the capacity of McCain is 1,800.)

One question: If all classes are dismissed for Landon Lectures, should students be required to attend? Another question: Why did so few students attend the lecture of the Secretary of State, William Perry?

Charles E. Reagan
Chairman, Landon Lecture series

▶ LANDON LECTURE

Students unable to go

Dear editor,

I would once again like to address the issue of having class on the day of a Landon Lecture. I am in my fourth semester and have not yet seen a Landon Lecture.

"We (the students) pay the money for the lectures, but most of the students can't go."

JESSICA LANGE
sophomore in biology and secondary education

The reason does not fall under the lack of interest for having famous people speak. The problem has been my required class attendance on the day and time of the Landon Lectures. My class conflict this semester left me the choice between missing one class and getting a 2-percent grade reduction or going to the Landon Lecture. So really I had no choice along with approximately 200 other students in my class.

I really do not blame the professors, because they need all of the class periods throughout the semester to introduce the course material. So, President Wefald, the decision becomes yours.

We (the students) pay money for K-State to sponsor the lectures, but most of the students cannot go. It is like having tickets to the Super Bowl and having a blizzard the weekend your flight is to leave for the game. Yes, you can watch the game on television, but it is not the same as being there.

I listened to Ross Perot on television, but I have heard him on television before. It would have been more meaningful to me if I would have been there in person. So, next semester, please cancel classes, because I would like to attend my first Landon Lecture and not watch it on television.

Jessica Lange
sophomore in biology and secondary education

▶ PETS

Easter pets need lasting care

Dear editor,

With the approach of the Easter holiday, merchants in the Manhattan area are promoting the sale of cute Easter bunnies and chicks to well-meaning parents and their children.

While many of these animals may come into homes where they are well cared for, many end up neglected; their novelty and cuteness wear off, and many people simply do not have the time, facilities or adequate information to properly care for these animals.

Buying or adopting a pet, whether it be a pony, dog or rabbit, should never become a spontaneous decision. Potential pet owners need to ask themselves several questions before acquiring any animal.

■ Can I afford this pet? This does not only include the purchase price of the animal. Can I afford veterinary care for the animal, such as vaccinations or medical treatment, if the animal becomes ill? Unfortunately, many people do not have information on the husbandry needs of their animals and are often given incorrect information. Many times, this ignorance and misinformation can lead to health repercussions and unfortunately may lead to the animal's death.

■ Can I provide adequate housing for the animal? Rabbits need to have a hutch where they can sleep, feel secure and be protected. Giving them free roam of a house or apartment can lead to problems with curious cats or dogs, and rabbits who are curious themselves may consume objects such as carpet fibers and toxic house plants, which may require medical treatment (refer back to question one). Ducks are simply not meant to be house pets. Adult birds are messy, and even well-meaning owners who keep a duck in the backyard need to worry about protection from roaming dogs and cats and from inclement weather.

■ Can I provide the animal with an adequate diet? Rabbits have special dietary requirements, including a need for fiber, which can be provided in the form of good-quality, fresh hay. Without this, they can develop serious digestive problems and problems with their teeth. Carrots and pelleted diets alone are not sufficient to maintain a rabbit's optimal health.

"Rabbits need to have a hutch where they can sleep, feel secure and be protected."

SABRINA ERNST
Exotic Animal Club president

■ Can I care for this animal for the rest of its life? Many people buy pets, forgetting that these cute, fuzzy animals will grow up into adults who may become significantly larger. Consider that the average life span of a rabbit is 6 years. If you are considering a rabbit as a pet, you need to plan for commitment that is at least this long; some rabbits can live up to 8 years. Dogs and cats can live well into their teens.

We are students of veterinary medicine at K-State. As future veterinarians, we are concerned and dismayed at the promotion of young rabbits and ducks as instant pets. This does not foster a healthy attitude toward the seriousness of pet ownership, and teaches children that some pets are "disposable."

We urge the Manhattan community to seriously consider the responsibilities and ramifications of pet ownership before purchasing these animals, or any animals, for their families. Pets are wonderful additions to any family, and rabbit ownership can be a rewarding experience, but their adoption or purchase should never be made on a whim.

Shockers slide by Cats

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

Just a couple of plays can make all the difference in the game of baseball.

A controversial call. The wrong pitch.

Unfortunately, for the K-State baseball team, all of the above and more took place in Thursday night's game against Wichita State, as the Shockers pulled off the 5-3 win at Dean Evans Stadium in Salina.

"We played great ball," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "You take away a few plays, and it's a different ballgame."

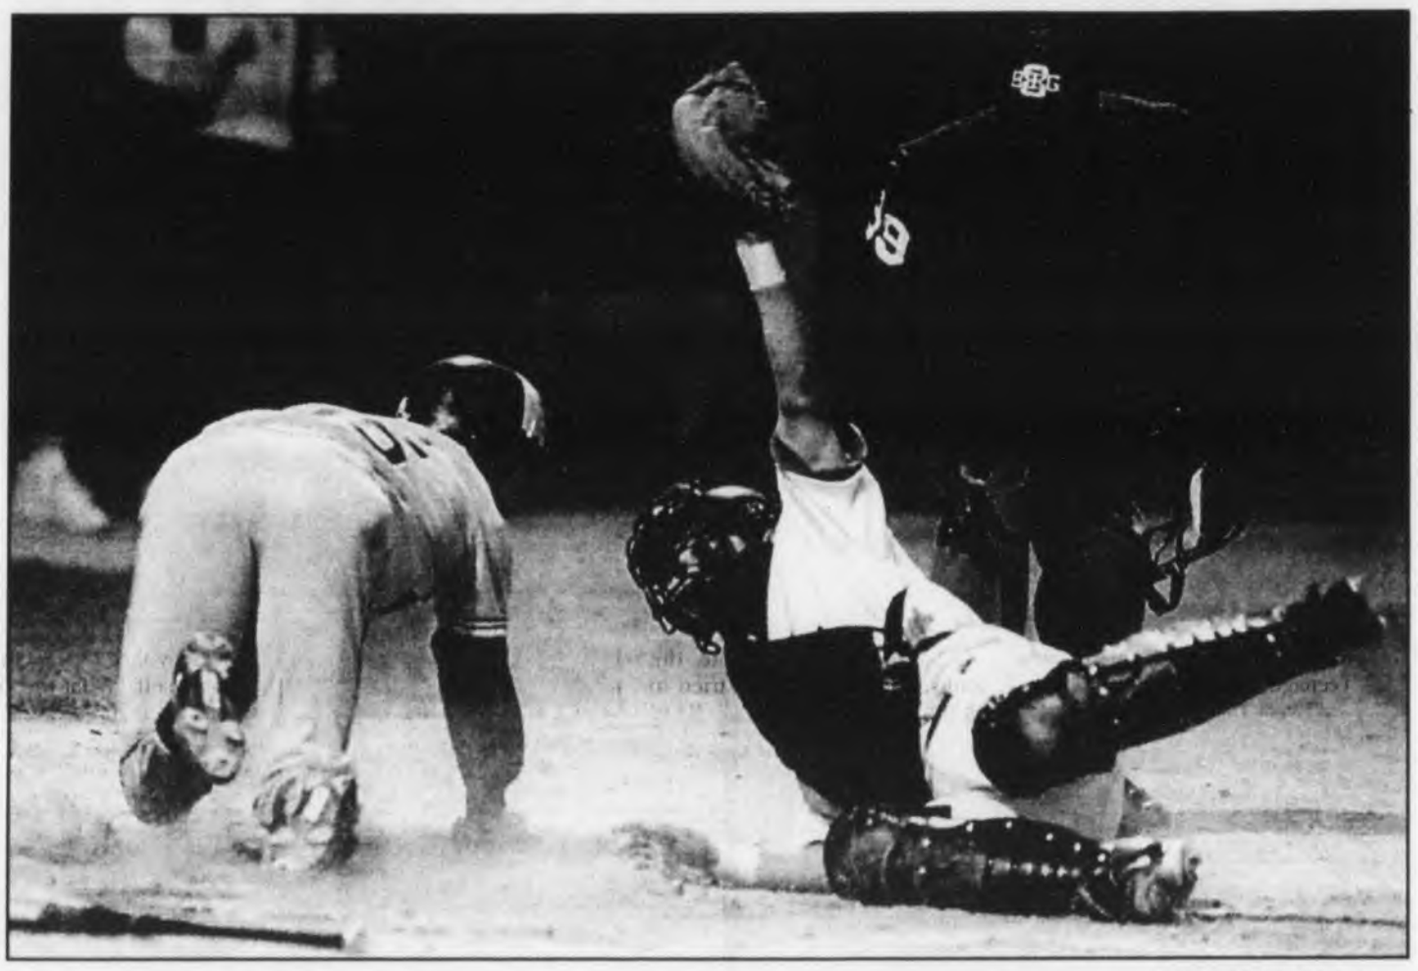
Wichita St. 5
K-State 3

One of those plays took place in the top of the third inning, when the Cats caught WSU's Randy Young in a rundown between first and second base.

The Cats apparently thought they had tagged the runner out as he was headed back to first, but the umpire didn't agree. Young went on to steal second, then advance on a Casey Blake single. That set the stage for the Shock's Jason Adams, who just happens to be WSU's leader in home runs with six on the year.

With the count at 3-2, Adams made Larry Walty's next pitch home run No. 7, scoring Young and Blake and putting the Shocks up, 3-0.

The Cats got on the board in the fourth, thanks to a Dave Hendrix two-run homer, his second dinger in two days.



With the Cats trailing by just one going into the top of the seventh, they experienced an unpleasant case of déjà vu. With one man on base, the Shocks' Adams was at the plate, facing a 3-2 count when he took Chris Traylor's pitch over the left-field wall for homer No. 8. That put the WSU up, 5-2.

"That home run was definitely the turning point of the game," Hendrix said.

While the Cats managed to score once more on an error in the bottom of the ninth, Heath Schesser flied out to the right fielder to end the game.

Despite the loss, Clark said his team is prepared for Kansas.

"We're playing good ball right now. I'm pleased with my guys, and if they keep playing like they've been playing, we should do well."

Tracksters to prepare for upcoming KU, Drake relays

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State gets one of its final chances at individual competition this weekend.

The Wildcats travel to Norman, Okla., Saturday to compete in the John Jacobs Invitational.

"We are hoping for decent weather for the meet because it gives us one of our few chances to run open events," K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said. "With the Kansas and Drake Relays coming up, there aren't too many chances to get people in open events before the Big Eight meet."

Nicole Green will try to earn a second invitation to the NCAA Outdoor Championships in the 200 meters this weekend.

Green qualified in the 400m at the College Station Relays at Texas A&M in her first meet of the season with a time of 52.6.

"I was a little surprised with my performance just because I haven't competed all that much," Green said. "As hard as I was training during the indoor season, I thought that I should be able to pick up where I left off last season."

Green's personal best stands at 52.16, which earned her all-America status at last season's outdoor national championships.

Green said she probably won't participate in the 400m again until the Big Eight Conference Outdoor Championships because she wants to work on her sprinting skills.

Last Thursday, Bill Fields took home two gold medals at the Emporia State Invitational in the 100m and the 200m.

Fields ranks in the top five of the Big Eight Conference in both events.

"I don't see this meet as one of my last chances," Fields said.

"Hopefully, I'll move up in the rankings, but we've been training so hard it would be surprising to have a really fast race."

K-State's distance squad made an impression at the Emporia State Invitational by capturing the 800m, 1,500m and 5,000m.

Jeanene Rugan took first in the 1,500m with a time of 4:44.37.

It was only her second race since injuring her hip prior to the Big Eight Cross Country Championships Oct. 29.

"She's been coming along real slow," distance coach Terry Drake said.

"I think she's going to get back in time to score in the Big Eight meet."

Doctors discovered Rugan had one hip that was slightly higher than the other.

The years of running caused extreme pain in the hip.

Drake said Rugan now wears a lift in one of her running shoes to allow for the height difference.

Irma Betancourt is leading the distance corps.

She ranks second in the Big Eight this season in the 800m.

She won the event at the College Station Relays and the SW Texas Invitational.

"It seems like all of the distance runners as far as the women go are improving tremendously this season," Drake said.

One notable absence in the meet this weekend will be sprinter Karissa Owens.

Owens strained her hamstring at the Texas Relays last weekend while running her leg of the 1,600m relay.

Netters look to stop losing streak on road

BRIAN THOMAS
Collegian

The K-State tennis team wraps up regular season play this weekend with a pair of Big Eight Conference matches.

The Wildcats, 7-10 overall and 1-4 in the conference, travel to Ames, Iowa, on Sunday for a meeting with the Iowa State Cyclones.

ISU enters the match with an overall record of 5-10 and 1-3 in the Big Eight. Last season, the Cats claimed one of their two conference wins against the Cyclones with a 5-0 victory at the Big Eight Tournament.

K-State hits the road after completing a four-match homestand which it finished 0-4.

In the final home match of the season, state rival Kansas easily defeated the Cats 8-1 at Ahearn Field House.

Despite the tough loss, Wildcat tennis coach Steve Bietau said he was pleased with his team's play.

"It was a much better performance," Bietau said.

"The scores showed that we played much better. The effort was also better. We were more competitive in spots. This gives us a better foundation to work from compared to our last match."

In the Kansas match-up, K-State's top-ranked player Karina Kuregian, the No. 13 singles player in the country, tangled with KU's No. 9-ranked Nora Koves.

Kuregian, 24-6, saw her 10-match win streak come to an end in a 6-4, 3-6, 6-1 loss to Koves.

"Nora was physically too strong for Karina," Bietau said.

"She just kept pounding away. Karina is a little prettier to watch on the court and a lot smoother. Nora is just bigger and stronger.

"Karina started to tire late. It was a very good match. That's the best player Karina's seen this semester."

The Wildcat all-American was named the Big Eight Conference's Netter-of-the-Week Tuesday and will try to start a new winning streak heading toward the postseason.

The No. 1 doubles team of Kuregian and Martine Shrubsole hope to continue their hot streak in Ames.

Kuregian and Shrubsole enter as the 14th-ranked doubles team and winners of 13 of their last 14 matches.

After the Iowa State match, the Cats move on to Lincoln, Neb., Monday for a battle with the Nebraska Cornhuskers, 6-13 overall and 0-4 in conference.

Bietau said his team needs to finish the conference season on a positive note.

"The players are doing a better job," Bietau said.

"There is a better awareness on the court. If we win both matches, we would be on line for a possible match-up with Colorado at the Big Eight Tournament. That scenario would be very attractive to us."

Bad weather dampens both teams' chances

BERNIE HANEY
Collegian

Weather didn't help the K-State golf teams at their tournament sites earlier this week.

The men's golf team played 36 of their scheduled 54 holes at the Bent Brook/Blazer Invitational before rain shortened the tournament.

After two rounds of play, the team tied for 12th place with Western Kentucky at 610 strokes.

"It's kind of a continuation on how we have played lately," K-State golf coach Mark Elliott said.

The sluggish play Elliott was referring to has resulted in the sixth- and eighth-place finishes in the last two tournaments.

After the first round of competition, the squad was tied for seventh place with a team total of 299 at the par-71 Bent Brook Golf Course.

Junior Scott Hovis led the Wildcats for the fourth-consecutive tournament and tied for 12th place in the tournament.

It was the first time in the spring season that he hasn't finish in the top 10.

"Scott Hovis played another good tournament. He's playing really well this spring," Elliott said.

Elliott said it's hard to have a good solid round with double or triple bogeys.

"It's hard to make birdies to offset doubles and triples," Elliott said. "There is no secret. We just didn't get the ball in the hole soon enough."

On the positive end, Elliott said the team has a shot to make the NCAA Regionals if it plays like they're capable of at the Big Eight Championships on April 24 and 25.

"We still have a shot at the regionals," Elliott said.

"If we finish fourth or fifth at the Big Eight Tournament, we have a legitimate shot to make regionals," he said.

Elliott said the men's team has had a good year.

"We finished first in two tournaments this year, which we weren't able to do last year," he said.

The women's team had the same problem with the weather and was only able to play 18 holes on the rain-soaked par-72 Trails Golf Club.

Out of 12 teams, the Wildcats ended up 10th with a one-round total of 342 at the Susie Maxwell Berning Golf Classic Tuesday.

"The weather doesn't allow us to come back and dig ourselves out of a hole with the 342 we shot," first-year assistant golf coach Tim Jennings said.

"We were disappointed that we didn't get to play three rounds," he said.

Pacing the Wildcats was junior Richelle Bond, who fired a nine-over-par 81 to finish in a nine-way tie for 15th place.

"She played real solid. There is not a golf course in the country that she can't shoot 80 on," Jennings said.

The tournament was scheduled to be a 54-hole event, but Jennings said the golf course was unplayable with the rain and lightning on Monday.

Jennings said he feels the team is capable of placing fifth at the Big Eight Championships in Stillwater, Okla., on April 24 and 25.

"There is no reason that we can't finish fifth at the Big Eight tournament," Jennings said.

"On paper, we look like a sixth- or seventh-place team, but that is why we play tournaments," he said.

Senior Jacque Wright, who has placed in the top 10 twice in the spring, struggled with an 85.

"Jacque has one final tournament, and hopefully, she can reach deep down and play well to finish her collegiate career," Jennings said.

▶EAKER SIGNS LETTER OF INTENT TO PLAY AT K-STATE

K-State coach Tom Asbury announced Thursday that Gerald Eaker, a 6-foot 11-inch, 230 pound center from Southeastern Community College in West Burlington, Iowa, has signed a national letter of intent to play for K-State. Eaker, a former McDonald's high school all-American from Chicago, began his collegiate career at Ohio State in 1992-93. He then transferred to Southeastern Community College, where he averaged 15.1 points, 6.9 rebounds and 5.0 block shots per game, while shooting 63.2 percent from the floor this season.

K-State doesn't expect to make any more signings official until Saturday at the earliest. He chose K-State over Kentucky and West Virginia.

Man removes dildo, city files charges

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — A city council member was acquitted Monday of charges he maliciously destroyed property when he removed two sex toys from a sculpture at city hall.

William Walsh removed the dildos in October after receiving complaints about Hans Evers' "Identidem" show at the city hall annex.

Evers, whose sculpture included two dildos and a photograph of a penis, said he had hoped to provoke debate about male identity, including men's anxieties about penis size.

I think Evers hit the nail on the head — (all pun intended).

The jury deliberated 40 minutes before returning the verdict.

Walsh, 50, was charged with malicious destruction of property of more than $250.

Prosecutors indicated they would seek only community service as a punishment if Walsh was convicted. He will probably be doing busy work around one of the local adult novelty shops.

After the jury was dismissed, Judge Mark Kovan said he had no doubt that Walsh was acting in what he considered to be good faith.

Good faith of what?

"The real question was is it his job to do what he did?" the judge said. (Insert a resounding 'no' right here.)

Evers left the courtroom without comment while Walsh announced he was on his way to attend a Mapplethorpe exhibit that was opening.

Have fun, Walsh.

Shut up, keep your prayers to yourself

GREENSBURG, Pa. — Two women banned from a church for their loud prayers were at it again Sunday, this time at another church.

Despite earlier requests from priests to stop, the two prayed aloud at Blessed Sacrament Cathedral right after an early Mass, the Rev. Richard Kosisko said. The women have been praying at the church for about six weeks.

Three pastors have asked them to stop so that the parishioners can spend time with the Lord in private prayer, Kosisko said.

The women, Joan Sudwoj and Cynthia Balconi, were banned Friday from another church in Youngwood, about five miles from Greensburg.

Several people have even been asked to stop their excessively loud kneeling during prayer and loud page-turning during hymnal singing.

The Roman Catholic congregation had sued the women, saying the loud prayers had disrupted Mass and other services for two years. A third woman had agreed to be quiet.

Kosisko, an assistant pastor at Blessed Sacrament, said he didn't know what would be done if the women continue to pray aloud after Masses.

"We just hope that the judge's decision will give them a message for the whole diocese," he said.

Balconi and Sudwoj have unlisted numbers and couldn't be reached for comment. Balconi and Sudwoj have been overheard saying they believe God has so many people praying at the same time that they wanted to be sure God heard their prayers.

Dead men don't wear camouflage

PORTLAND, Ore. — Retired Army Sgt. Norman Rogers is alive. He just can't seem to get that across to the government.

Rogers, 43, says the government mistakenly declared him dead Feb. 1 and stopped paying his retirement and disability checks.

"We all thought it was funny at first. But shoot, I'm missing two months' pay now," he said.

Rogers had been paying his mortgage with the $854 monthly benefits, which were automatically deposited into his bank account.

He discovered the problem three weeks ago when his own checks started bouncing. The bank said Veterans Affairs had declared him dead.

It's strange the bank didn't seem to notice that a person who was declared dead was still writing checks.

It was probably quite stressful for the bank representative to tell the man across the desk that he was dead.

Despite his daily calls to government offices, the mistake has not been corrected, Rogers said.

Army spokesman Lt. Col. Bill Harkey in Washington said Sunday he was not aware of the case but that it would be investigated.

Probably with the utmost speed, which means it will take a few years, knowing government paperwork.

Rogers served 20 years in the Army. He now drives short-haul trucks.

"The people at work call me 'Dead Man' on the CB," Rogers said.

Smatterings were not sponsored by anybody with any sense of journalistic ethics.

▲Truck Stop Love played a set of songs to promote its first full-length recording, "How I Spent My Summer Vacation."

►Matt Mozier (left) and Brad Huhmann (right) perform live in the DB92 studios in McCain last Friday afternoon. Truck Stop Love's new album was released Tuesday.

With the release of their first album, the members of Truck Stop Love come a step closer to their dream of Playing for a living

Rich Yarges reached over to the stereo set and flipped the album over to side B. A pop was heard as the needle hit the vinyl.

Big Star, a little-known band from the early 1970s, crackled from the speakers.

Yarges, guitarist and founding member of Manhattan's Truck Stop Love, began to tell about recording their first full-length LP in Memphis, Tenn.

"We got to meet Jody Stevens," drummer Eric Melin said, at the first pause in conversation. His face was beaming.

The interviewer stared blankly.

"Never mind," Melin said, his grin fading.

Jody Stevens is the former drummer for Big Star, a hugely influential Memphis band from the '70s touted by the likes of R.E.M., the Replacements and Teenage Fanclub.

"Every once in a while we try to share our excitement with somebody," Melin said, somewhat chagrined. "Not everybody knows who they are."

The members of Truck Stop Love do. And that's why they jumped at the chance to have their album produced by Big Star alumnus Jody Stevens.

"It's a huge compliment. All four of us agree," Melin said.

When Scotti Bros. Records gave TSL free rein to choose a producer, the band selected Stevens and Jeff Powell, not really believing they would get them.

They got them. As a result, TSL is more comfortable with this album than with its last album, its self-titled EP.

"Last time, we wrote the songs, and the producer tried to change it all around," Brad Huhmann, bass player, said.

"Yes," Melin said. "This time, we feel like we had a hand in making the album we wanted to make. This is a more natural Truck Stop Love sound."

Truck Stop Love has just released "How I Spent My Summer Vacation," its first full-length album.

A nationally known label makes the album available to audiences all over the United States and Canada.

Four years ago, they never would have dreamed of making it this far.

The band was born Halloween night in 1991, Huhmann said.

"I was dressed up as the Pillsbury Doughboy for our first practice," he said.

Melin and Yarges are the two founding members of Truck Stop Love.

Melin doubled as the drummer for the Moving Van Goghs before getting serious with TSL.

They were soon joined by Matt Mozier, guitarist and vocalist, and Huhmann on bass and vocals.

TSL released its first album, a self-titled EP, in September of '92. In 1993, the band was signed to Scotti Bros. Records, a national record label.

More exposure came late in 1994, with the release of the Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers tribute album, which features TSL and 11 other rock groups doing cover songs of Petty classics.

And then came something completely different — a new album, released earlier this week.

Fans of TSL had a chance to hear the entire album at Club Berlin Monday.

The label was generously offering good music and free beer at Truck Stop Love's record release party.

Needless to say, there was no shortage of ladies, gentlemen or members of the press.

Although it might have seemed that the band was kicking back and taking it easy, they were performing a very important function of bands in the record business — selling.

"The bigger you get, to a point, it gets more about selling music and less about playing music," Mozier said. "It's just part of the deal. If you don't sell yourself, you won't sell."

People underestimate what it's like to be in a rock band, Mozier said.

"We give up a lot of ourselves and a lot of our free time to do what we do," he said. "There's not a day that goes by that I don't ask myself 'What the fuck am I doing? I'm 26 years old, and I'm in a band.'"

A misconception about musicians in bands is that they have no jobs and just sit around doing nothing but writing and playing music, Melin said.

The truth is, most members of bands have little disposable income. Because playing in the band comes first in their lives, most depend on flexible-scheduling part-time jobs, Yarges said.

"You have to do it at the cost of everything else, including your personal life," he said.

Mozier said he agreed.

"You can only work the jobs that allow you to be in the band," he said.

Melin spoke for the rest of the band, saying his next short-term goal is to be able to quit his day job and make enough money from the music business to devote more time to music.

"There's not enough hours in the day to get done what we want to get done," he said.

Among the things TSL is trying to get done is making a music video to support its new album.

CHRISTY CALLOWAY

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 20)

You vivacious fire signs are all alike. You are always looking for the spotlight and always wanting it right on your face. This week, you need to take time out for others and listen to a frustrated friend. You can't always be the center of attention. P.S. Don't neglect the work load because if you do, next week will be stressful on the nerves.

TAURUS (APRIL 21-MAY 21)

This week, jump into the social scene. You'll be so happy that you did, and you'll keep busy. A close associate has been working your nerves lately. Just tell them how you feel. Romance needs a little work. This time, it's you who needs to be a little more devoted. For the weekend: Go out, and fun will find you.

GEMINI (MAY 22-JUNE 21)

In your experience, you have learned that your fickle and flirtatious self can get you in a lot of trouble. Not this week — you can use your charm to get your foot through many doors. Steer clear of anyone trying to hand you something for nothing because you'll end up paying for it in the end. For the weekend: Take control.

CANCER (JUNE 22 -JULY 23)

Last week helped you accomplish a lot of things you didn't think you would, but friends are still keeping you worrying about newer and bigger problems. Financial setbacks in the past have hurt you, but they will keep you alert this week. Romance is taking a turn this week. For the weekend: there looks like a terrific opportunity ahead.

LEO (JULY 24-AUG. 23)

You might have been rushing all around last week trying to do all the last-minute things you had piling up, but this week could be worse. Romance and finances are both in the clear, so all looks well. Be prepared for minor setbacks, but don't let them disturb you. For the weekend: Fun, fun and more fun.

VIRGO (AUG. 24-SEPT. 23)

This week, it is important for you to start being direct about what you want. Don't allow a friend to use your weaknesses to get the upper hand. It will be a hard week for you to stay focused. For the weekend: Vanish like Houdini.

LIBRA (SEPT. 24-OCT. 23)

You have been keeping a low profile lately, but spunky Libra needs to enjoy the spotlight more. So use this week to catch up on socializing. A key importance for you this week is friends, so remain loyal and devoted. For the weekend: Be with your sweetheart.

SCORPIO (OCT. 24-NOV. 22)

This week, you will feel more together and back to the norm. Last week had you working twice as hard to keep from slacking. A friend's insight about your life gives you great hope and calms your nerves. Start next week off by getting tasks done early. For the weekend: Kick back and relax.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 23-DEC. 21)

Last week had you tending to others, but this week it's back on the fast track. But Sags enjoy being on the go, so this will be an exciting week for you. Make sure to get important work completed by midweek. For the weekend: Be a socialite.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 20)

This week, you've been taking it easy a little bit too much. You have been lounging around. It's time for you to buckle down and get some work done this week. You will be busy with school and work, so say goodbye to your social life. For the weekend: One last party.

AQUARIUS (JAN 21-FEB. 19)

Last week, all you did was try hard to please others. It's time for you to take some quality time out for yourself. Stop over-plannning and remember you can only be at one place at a time. Financial situations might have you frustrated, so just be patient. For the weekend: Just chill.

PISCES (FEB. 20-MARCH 20)

This week is an excellent time to consider making lifelong decisions. Your love life is still beautiful, so enjoy it while you can. News from a distant friend has you on cloud nine. A friend might deceive you, so be on the lookout. For the weekend: Stay out late.

Act surprises audience, band

MIKE HILL
Collegian

The K-State Union Station became unplugged Thursday night as the Carolina band Life In General brought its happy music to Manhattan.

Life In General was sponsored by the Union Program Council Eclectic Entertainment Committee.

The band originally consisted of Jerry Chapman and Shelly Sutton but met its third member, Jason Levasseur, while they were performing.

"We played at Jason's fraternity, and he was the obnoxious drunk that wanted to play along," Chapman said.

Life In General is different from other bands in that the members often switch the instruments they play and take turns with lead vocals.

"We make up the show as we go along. That way it is fun for us," Levasseur said.

Levasseur said the show is always a surprise for the band and the audience.

"We don't tell each other what we are playing until we need to pick the instruments," he said.

Although they all switch, Levasseur plays most of the percussion, which consists of a snare and bass drum along with various symbols and wood blocks.

Chapman and Sutton play acoustic guitar most of the time, with Chapman playing electric guitar once in a while and Sutton doing percussion when Levasseur sings.

The act consists of various covers such as "Mrs. Robinson" and "The Weight" as well as many original numbers.

Life In General's stage presence is so relaxing, it brought a smile to every face.

The way Life In General plays each song with such ease makes it look as if they are having as much fun as the audience.

Life In General's instrumental skills are strong with no one member outdoing another. They complement each other perfectly.

Jeff Boren, freshman undecided, said the band had some good covers.

"They're pretty good, but it's a very weird mix," he said.

Jennifer Fitzgerald, freshman undecided, said even though they play different music than what she listens to, she liked them.

"I usually don't listen to acoustic music, but I really like them," she said.

Chapman said a high point for Life In General would have to be the night they jammed with Eddie Van Halen.

"We were playing in a hotel bar, and he came down and jammed with us at 1 in the morning," he said.

Resolution emphasizes communication

Susan Peterson, the University legislative liaison, is in favor of the resolution, Henry said.

Wefald spoke before the Kansas Board of Regents and the other university presidents and stressed cooperation between administration, students and the legislature, he said.

"It's almost imperative to have someone up there checking on the issues every day," Henry said.

Establishing the committee would allow students to be more active in lobbying the Legislature and open a line of communication between administration and students at K-State, he said.

"All this bill does is add more bureaucracy to the already ballooning Chia Pet of student government," Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said.

Senate already has a State and Community Affairs Committee. They should be communicating with the liaison and opening the lines of communication, he said.

LeDoux also cited problems in filling committees already established as another reason he was opposed to the resolution.

Henry said Peterson did not participate in the State and Community Affairs meetings because its meeting time was inconvenient for her. The new committee would be set up with her as the chair and would have a student vice chair.

Muir said Senate should not miss this chance to improve communication between students and administration.

"I think this is the perfect opportunity for you to be heard, not only in the legislature but in Anderson Hall, where you already think we don't listen," he said.

The resolution to create the University-Wide State Affairs Committee passed 28-24-1.

Senate also approved five special allocations with votes of 41-10-1.

The Women's Union will receive $710, the Hispanic American Leadership Organization will receive $556, Asian American Students for Intercultural Awareness will receive $445, the Bangladeshi Student Organization will receive $735 and the International Coordinating Council will receive $787 to attend various national conferences.

Muir sponsored another by-law revision redefining residence halls for the election of chief justices. Previously, residence halls were defined as Strong Complex, Moore, Haymaker, Ford, West, Smurthwaite, Goodnow and Marlatt.

Muir's amendments changed the definition to include Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile instead of Strong Complex.

When the amendment was brought up earlier in the semester, Nonnie Shivers, attorney general, told Senate the leadership of Boyd and Van Zile were not interested in being separated for election of chief justices.

Since that time, the leadership has changed, Shivers said. The new leadership is in favor of having the separation.

"If they want those leadership positions, we're going to give it to them," she said.

Senate also approved the new student health insurance plan submitted by the Student Health Advisory Committee.

7th contender enters GOP race

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Fiery conservative Rep. Bob Dornan became the seventh GOP presidential contender Thursday, injecting his no-holds-barred style into the race as he railed against the entertainment world's "filth" and society's "moral decay."

"I believe that America is poisoning itself, that we are destroying this God-blessed nation of ours," the California congressman told a band of supporters at the national memorial to slain police officers.

Dornan kicked off his dark-horse campaign with a rambling, flamboyant speech that showcased two of his favorite themes — admiration for the nation's military and police officers and devotion to moral issues.

His chances of winning the nomination are slim, according to political observers of all stripes. And he suggested he knew it, saying, "Winning is not everything. I'm in it to try and win, but it's not everything.

"I want to go down swinging," he said. "I love the arena. I love the dust."

Dornan, a one-time TV actor and talk-show host, was elected last fall to his ninth term.

He said he hopes to influence the debate and claimed he had already done so because Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, the early front-runner, this week courted conservatives with speeches about values.

The outspoken Dornan is known for strong conservative positions — including staunch opposition to abortion — and for his attacks on President Clinton's character and draft record. He is likely to compete for the most conservative voters with former Reagan administration officials Pat Buchanan and Alan Keyes. And some strategists think he could chip away some support from Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas.

Also in the GOP nomination fight are former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander and Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania. Sen. Dick Lugar of Indiana and California Gov. Pete Wilson are expected to join the field in the coming weeks.

Dornan said his aim is to keep them all focused on the social issues.

"You cannot have liberty unless a people are virtuous," he said, blasting the "filth and blasphemous language on all of the situation comedies" and other TV shows.

"Our culture is melting down," he said. "Moral decay is rotting the heart and soul of our country."

As to criticism that he is too hotheaded to be a viable candidate, Dornan said, "Yes I've been tough. I apologize for nothing." Fellow House members demanded recently that he apologize for a floor speech in which he accused Clinton of giving "aid and comfort to the enemy" during the Vietnam War, which Clinton protested as a student.

Former White House political director Ron Kaufman — who worked with Dornan when the congressman was one of President Bush's most ardent re-election supporters — said Dornan would bring a flair to the field.

"It will keep people honest. He is not afraid to raise any issue. He'll be controversial," Kaufman said.

Dornan lavished praise on Dole, whom he admires for his World War II valor.

One of Dornan's proudest accomplishments is his own peacetime service as an Air Force pilot in the 1950s. He recounted Thursday how he bailed out of a jet on a training flight over the Pacific.

"I came as close to death as Bob Dole did but without the pain — there's no pain with drowning," he said. Dornan joined the Air Force toward the end of the Korean War and never saw combat.

He also said, "I put my life on the line for Israel, for Hungary, for Vietnam, for Korea, and God never asked me to fire at another mother's son."

Holiday meaning can be ambiguous making them, although I don't want to brag," Heather Bradshaw, junior in English and literature, said.

Jason Ballah, sophomore in computer science, said he also liked multicolored eggs because they have a diverse color scheme. But he said he doesn't make them often.

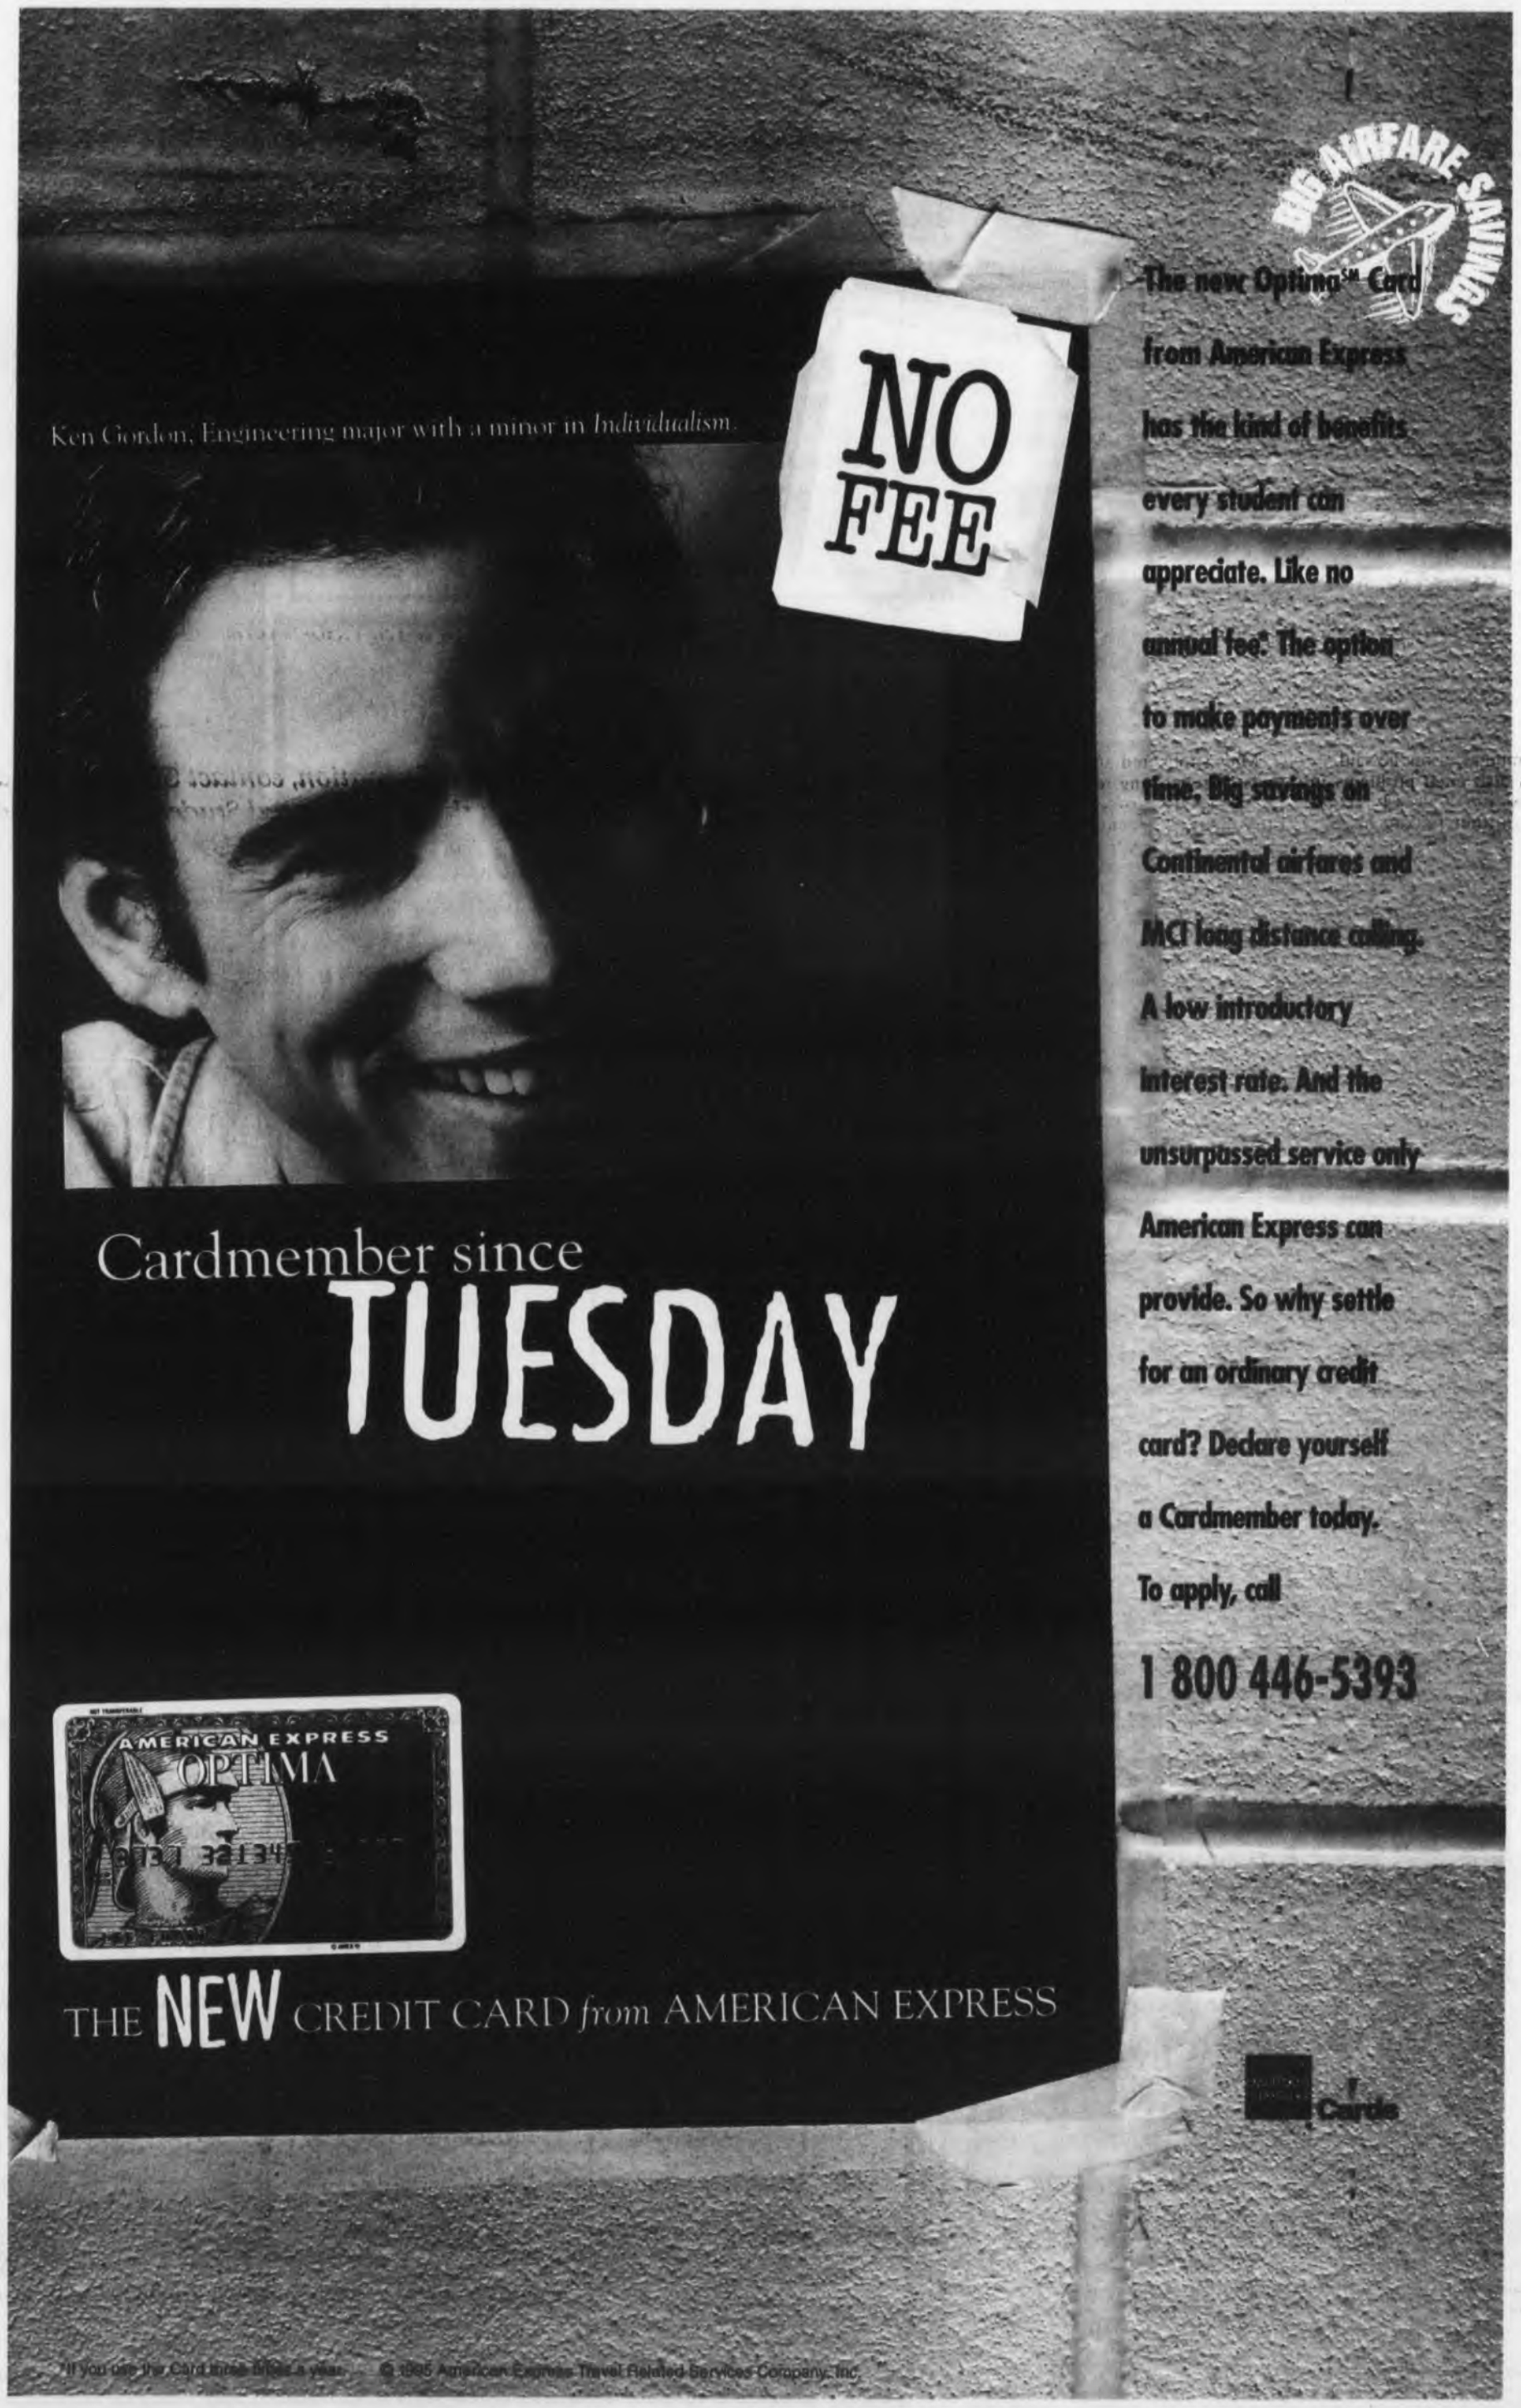
"I don't like to make them because I like to eat them," he said.

Although Easter is not just about dying eggs, some students think it is easy to get caught up in the Easter Bunny, Easter egg hunts and dying eggs and forget the real meaning.

"A lot of kids don't really know what the meaning of Easter is," Liebengood said.

Ballah said he thinks the Easter Bunny and Easter egg hunts take away from the true meaning.

Tony Bieker, sophomore in biochemistry, said he doesn't think there is anything wrong with doing the traditional festivities.



"It shows the kids a special time," he said. "It can take away from the holiday, though. It just depends on the parents. As long as they explain what is going on, it shouldn't matter."

'Sons' a challenging, creative performance

JUSTIN STAHLMAN
Collegian

An American family struggled to let go of a son lost in World War II in K-State Theatre's performance of "All My Sons" by Arthur Miller.

The play will be performed at 8 p.m. today and Saturday, and April 19-22 in Nichols Theatre. A matinee will also be performed at 2 p.m. April 22.

Miller's play, which was written in 1947, focused on the balance of honor and American values.

Everything from the multi-level set to the characters' intense performances made for an exciting climax to the K-State Theatre season.

The elaborate set, an all-American, neighbor-friendly backyard of the 1950s, was impressive. The house's brick wall was cleverly simulated to allow actors to move through many levels and still be seen.

The whimsical characters are introduced immediately conversing in a picture-perfect bliss that complements the scenery.

Because it is sometimes acceptable to sweep touchy subjects under the carpet, the hearty, quick-witted characters foreshadow the tragic main theme of lies and social responsibility.

The younger characters tend to ask more questions making the others uneasy.

A defective line of airplane parts caused the deaths of fighter pilots, and the wrong man was sent to prison for it.

Now that he is free, the truth may also threaten the family. The truth has been covered up for so many years that it is easier to just forget about it.

The characters created a tension that grew more believable throughout the production.

Joe Keller, played by Eric Stonestreet, senior in sociology, was the most diverse character of the production.

He handled his challenging role by being forceful when appropriate and displaying extreme patience when other characters fell apart.

Kate Keller, played by Laura Camien, graduate student in speech, was a nagging, annoying mother by insisting her son was still alive and would come home.

To face the fact that her son was dead was to accept that her husband knowingly shipped the defective parts.

It was not clear until the end who truly was responsible for the approving of the defective parts.

The intense conflict was almost too much. I was nervous through the entire second half, but this is also why "All My Sons" is an excellent drama. The conflict is ever-mounting.

ALL MY SONS

"All My Sons" will be performed at 8 p.m. today and Saturday, and April 19-22 in Nichols Theatre. A matinee will be performed at 2 p.m. April 22.

Truck Stop Love to play at Wareham Opera House tonight

The band will fly to Hollywood, Calif., Saturday to film some footage, Melin said. At the behest of the band, the video will include 8-mm footage filmed by the band of TSL in Manhattan.

Before Saturday, however, the band will promote itself with a concert at the Wareham Opera House Friday in Manhattan.

Special guests God's Favorite Band will play with TSL. GFB, the crunching rock band from Minnesota, released three albums before breaking up.

Being friends with TSL for three years, GFB got back together just for this occasion. After all, releasing a first album comes only once, and it is a time to be celebrated.

With a 24-ounce plastic cup full of beer in hand, Melin jogged toward the DJ booth, dodging a table along the way and stopping to ask a guy if he was having fun.

Club Berlin was full of beer, smoke and about 120 people. Small groups were gathered here and there, enjoying the smorgasbord of new album rock that was playing over the monitor speakers hanging over the dance floor.

Melin removed one compact disc from the player and inserted another.

"It sounds cliché, but music really does sound great when you turn it up really loud," he said as an evil grin crossed his face.

He rotated the volume knob past its midpoint and hit the play button on the CD player.

Truck Stop Love's new album began playing loudly.

"All right," a woman sitting next to the bar said. That would pretty much sum up TSL's musical attitude.

"We're not into politics. We're not trying to change the world," Melin said.

"We're just four down-to-earth guys, writing about shit that makes us happy or sad. If people like us, that's good."

Cassandra says the smaller, the better

Dear Cassie,

I have been reading your article over the years, and is it just my imagination, or are you getting smaller? It seemed like you used to print longer letters and write longer responses. Are you sick or just lazy?

Signed, Curious George

Dear George,

Neither. My column is getting smaller. The fact is, I am only allowed a certain amount of space to respond to letters, but the letters I get are long.

I try and put as much detail from them in Dear Cassie as possible, but when I do, it leaves very little space for a response.

I encourage letters and read all of them, even though some might just be too long (or disgusting) to print.

You can help the chances of getting a letter in if you keep it short and to the point.

Sexy movie too trendy to age well

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

If you want your buttons pushed, a great conversation topic or just a bit of steamy sex and intrigue, the movie of 1994 for you is "Disclosure."

When presidential candidate Bob Dole griped about the state of Hollywood movies in Iowa recently, the movie "Disclosure" could have been complaint No. 1.

For those of you who didn't see the countless TV reports or didn't read the innumerable articles written about reverse sexual harassment, which is the main issue at hand in "Disclosure," you might want to see this movie.

"Disclosure" closes the book on the Michael Douglas sexy-mystery flick genre once and for all — anyway, his body just doesn't quite work in sex scenes at his age, at least to a point at which the audience can stomach.

If you recall the first of his sexy flicks, "Fatal Attraction" (1987), a powerful woman takes control of him, and things get out of hand. Most of us were banned from seeing that movie by our mothers, so go rent it if you haven't seen it. Glenn Close is pretty terrifying. Then came "Basic Instinct" (1992), with Sharon Stone filling the Close role.

They were both fairly fine films, but I'm sure the sex had something to do with their enormous success and controversy.

"Disclosure" does not depart from those earlier films at all. I must admit I enjoyed "Disclosure," but it didn't achieve quite the kick or quite the relevance of the earlier two films.

Tom Sanders (Douglas) is an executive at a high-tech computer software company in Seattle (ooh, so trendy), who is up for a big promotion. Problem is, Sanders' old flame, Meredith Johnson (Demi Moore), pops in from another office and snatches the job out from under him. When she invites Sanders up to her new office for a re-aquaintance drinkie-poo, she pounces her lusty, busty self onto him.

Sanders, being a man with normal desires, engages momentarily but then tells her no repeatedly. After doing some "stuff" (this is a family paper), Sanders gets up and runs out of the office, leaving Johnson behind to fume and curse.

After this little mess, Johnson then accuses Sanders of sexually harassing her. "Disclosure" then focuses into a who-do-you-trust story of deceitful bosses and two-faced friends, with funny and scary cameos by Dennis Miller and Donald Sutherland.

Because the movie is based on a book by best-seller-wiz Michael Crichton, the use of high-tech computers and virtual reality is completely expected.

What isn't expected is Demi Moore's flat performance. She must have watched hundreds of "Dynasty" episodes with bitchy Joan Collins to get her character down because that's as far as it goes.

Douglas doesn't do anything different then his usual messed-up, white male schtick.

The biggest letdown of the movie is its up-to-the-minute trendiness. This movie won't age well, but it definitely satisfies for the time being.

MOVIE

The Union Program Council will present "Disclosure" at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Friday and at 7 p.m. Saturday in Union Forum Hall. Tickets are $1.75.

Groove Kats' variety caters to Aggieville crowd

MIKE HILL
Collegian

Raw talent defined Rowdy Trouty's new Tuesday night duo, the Groove Kats.

James Anderson, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, and Don Saunders, freshman in finance, said they started playing together at Homecoming this year but didn't take it seriously.

"We didn't really start playing together until mid-February, and we've played Trouty's about five times," Anderson said.

Saunders said the official name of the group is James Anderson and the Groove Kats.

"I was drunk one night when we were playing, and I just said it," he said. "The name has stuck ever since."

The duo consists of lead vocalist Saunders, who plays the piano and guitar, and Anderson, a guitarist and backup vocalist.

The Groove Kats play everything from Pearl Jam to Blues Traveler to James Taylor, but they also base their set around audience requests.

Anderson said the duo also plays some stuff people might not have heard.

"We have a few originals, and we play a few covers from Don's old band," he said.

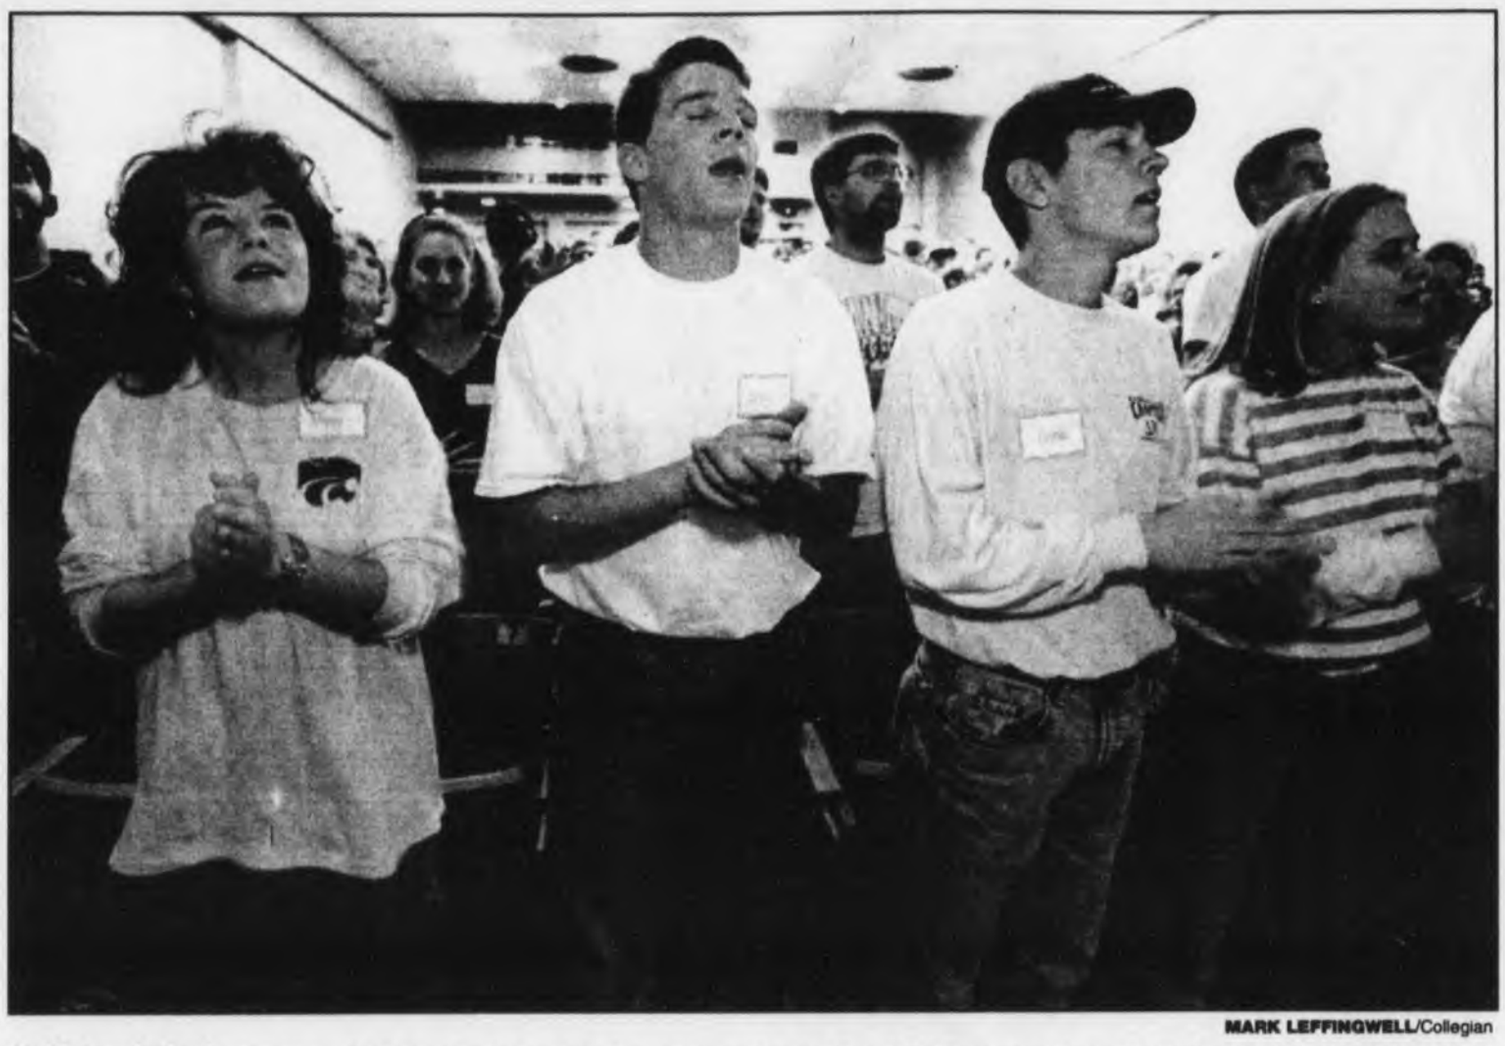
Mike Peterson, junior in advertising, said Saunders does a good job with the music.

"He has a pretty universal voice that fits the music he sings," he said.

The duo has talent. Saunders' strong keyboard playing at times borders on incredible, and Anderson has a solid guitar playing ability.

At times, the duo seemed to be taken over by Saunders' keyboard playing, but with the experience they are gaining at this time, they will be a solid fixture in the Manhattan live-music scene.

Brad West, senior in marketing, said the Groove Kats play for the college crowd.



"Trouty's is usually known as a piano bar, but these songs are alternative," West said.

Pastor says faith helped him regain control of his life

ANDY BARTLETT
Collegian

Many people don't look for the Lord until they face a time of great need, said a pastor and former student body president of Friends University.

David Castleberry said his time of need came when he had taken to a life of alcohol and late-night parties while a wife and cerebral palsy-stricken daughter waited up for him at home.

It was among the darkest of times in his life, he said.

"I told myself, 'I'm willing to change,'" he said.

It was during this time that Castleberry's search for an answer led him to bring Jesus into his life.

Castleberry's sister-in-law invited him to church six years ago. She told him if he believed, Jesus would take him places he never thought possible.

"I've never looked back," he said.

Acceptance of the Lord changed Castleberry from the man his wife once called "nothing but a pig" to the dynamic deliverer of lightning-fast sermons not unlike the one he delivered Thursday to a small crowd in the K-State Union Courtyard.

Castleberry's story is one of reaching one's potential and of attaining goals that seem impossible.

As a 36-year-old student, Castleberry said he felt a bit like Rodney Dangerfield in the movie "Back to School." However, his acceptance of the Lord into his life had empowered him with the belief that he could do anything he wanted to do.

Castleberry, as a 36-year-old, became a reserve linebacker on the Friends football team, ran for and won the position of student body president and was elected homecoming king.

The joys of youth that had been taken away by alcohol returned to Castleberry through his relationship with God, he said.

SPEAKER

Dave Castleberry will speak again today at noon in the K-State Union Courtyard.

During his sermon, Castleberry talked about his daughter Amanda, whose cerebral palsy has left her without the ability to speak or move.

He recounted a family trip to Los Angeles, where the computer Amanda uses to communicate with other people was to be featured on a TV show.

The Castleberry family was shuttled around Los Angeles in a 40-foot white limo, was given free tickets to Disneyland and given royal treatment.

"Since we were with Amanda, we didn't have to stand in any lines and we could go on the rides twice if we wanted to," Castleberry said.

Castleberry attributed the hospitality given to his family during the trip to Jesus.

"Jesus says 'If you have me, then I will take care of you,'" Castleberry said.

Castleberry then set out to prove the existence of a theological message in, of all places, the story of "The Three Little Pigs."

"The first pig was a drinker and a partier, I'm convinced," Castleberry said.

"Big Bad Wolf Satan didn't have any problem blowing his house down. The second pig read the Bible occasionally and went to church on Easter and Christmas, so the wolf had more trouble blowing his house down."

"The last pig laid his foundation by the word of God," he said.

"He did what was necessary for protection. It doesn't matter how bad things get outside; if you've built your house right, you will be protected."

Court rules woman can begin military training

All-male college violates woman's constitutional rights

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, S.C. — An appeals court cleared the way Thursday for Shannon Faulkner to become the first woman to take part in military training at the Citadel, unless the school comes up with military-style education for women by the fall.

A panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed that South Carolina's all-male military college violated her rights under the equal-protection clause of the 14th Amendment in refusing to admit her.

The 2-1 decision upheld an order last July by U.S. District Judge C. Weston Houck, who ended 151 years of all-male military education at the Charleston school.

Faulkner has been attending classes at the Citadel since January 1994 under an order from Houck but had not been allowed to take part in military training or wear a uniform while the case was being appealed.

The appeals court ordered the school to admit Faulkner to the corps of cadets in August unless it can come up with an alternative plan to give women military-style education by then.

But the panel also said it was unlikely the school could have such a plan ready by the fall, when Faulkner will be a junior. Cadets cannot begin the program after their junior year.

"We're basically where we were last summer, playing beat the clock again," Faulkner, a 20-year-old sophomore, said. "I'm very optimistic about getting in, it's just how are things going to work out."

The Citadel's lawyer, Dawes Cooke, said school officials have been working on an alternative plan.

"I like to think we're in good position to meet the court's requirements to have one in place by August," he said.

South Carolina Attorney General Charlie Condon said the state will move ahead with the alternative program and won't immediately appeal the order.

"We're pleased with the decision. It says very clearly that single-gender education is constitutional ... it's just that you have to have a substantively comparable program," he said.

Faulkner applied to the Citadel in 1993 after having her high-school guidance counselor delete references to her sex on her transcript.

The college accepted her, then rejected her after learning she is a woman.

Faulkner sued in 1993, claiming the school's all-male policy amounted to sex discrimination, and Houck agreed.

The Citadel argued during a trial last May that staying all male was not discrimination but part of a state policy of offering a variety of choices in higher education. The school also said there was no demand by women for a Citadel-type education.

The Citadel and Virginia Military Institute in Lexington, Va., are the only state-supported, all-male military colleges in the nation, and both schools have been sued by the Justice Department over their policies.

In the VMI case, courts have ruled that the school can set up a military-style program for women at nearby Mary Baldwin College.

South Carolina has discussed doing that but has not come up with a plan.

Judge Kenneth K. Hall wrote that while VMI and the Citadel "have ceaselessly insisted that education is at the heart of this debate, I suspect that these cases have very little to do with education.

"They instead have very much to do with wealth, power, and the ability of those who have it now to determine who will have it later," he said in a concurring opinion.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Losing candidate to seek spot again

Hayhurst said she put up signs, posters and did chalk drawings, mainly around Justin Hall and Bluemont Hall.

Jeff Dougan, sophomore in mechanical engineering, finished one spot and 229 votes away from getting a engineering senate seat. Dougan received five votes. Dougan knew all five people who voted for him.

Under the SGA rules, if one of the new senators resigns or loses his position he would be next in line to assume a Senate seat.

Dougan said, "The first day of the elections, some of my friends said they preferred me to another candidate, and said they thought I would do a better job."

"I was flattered," he said. "I think I'll run next year."

Elections Committee chairman wants to stop write-in voting

However, he also said that write-in campaigns are usually unsuccessful.

"Anyone who is serious about running will register anyway," Raney said.

Write-in votes are a disadvantage when candidates are running for all slots because of the extra time involved in tabulation.

The Elections Committee must count all write-in votes separately. All write-in candidates that receive more than two votes must then be verified as students.

"We had 10 votes for John Doe," Schneiter said. "John Doe could be a student, but it was a joke."

Having write-in candidates is also a bad idea because they are not bound by the elections regulations, Schneiter said.

"They have no rules, so they can do whatever they want," Schneiter said.

Schneiter said he hopes to make changes in the elections process.

"I would like to eliminate all write-in votes except for positions that need it," Schneiter said.

Mark Dikeman, junior in animal science and industry, said he wrote in a candidate for agriculture student council.

"They had the position last year, and no one was running for it," Dikeman said.

Craig Walker, freshman in environmental design, wrote in a candidate for architecture senator. He chose to vote for a write-in candidate who came to speak to his studio class.

"Out of all the candidates, they had the most guts to come and speak," Walker said.

Colin Flynn, junior in secondary education, was elected as education senator with eight write-in votes.

"I had considered running for education senator," Flynn said. "Then, when I heard that positions were open, I told some friends that I would do it if they wanted me to."

Student gets most votes in 3 races he entered people who lost by two votes.

"It sucks, but I'm glad I lost by just a few votes and not more," Koo said.

On the other end of the spectrum, Aaron Otto, sophomore in pre-law, received the most votes for Arts and Science Council, as well as for the Board of Student Publications and arts and sciences senator.

When Otto was informed that he swept the top spot in each division he ran for, he said, "Really?"

"It is a good feeling getting picked No. 1. It's an honor, and I am flattered," Otto said.

"It makes me feel like I did a good job this last year," he said.

James Wilroy, junior in political science and international studies, lost his bid for an arts and science council position.

Wilroy said he would just continue with his education.

"I didn't take it as aggressively as others did. I didn't put the election in front of my academic," he said.

Wilroy said he still wanted the position.

Wilroy said he would not try again next year because he plans to graduate next spring.

In the race for Agriculture Council president, Jerrod Westfahl, sophomore in agriculture economics, defeated Kevin Suderman, but Suderman's efforts were not all in vain.

Suderman will be vice president for the council, he said.

"There won't be any sour grapes," he said.

Suderman was left out of the SGA election results in Thursday's Collegian.

Suderman said his goal was to be on council, and he achieved that goal.

He said he wanted to be active in the college and on the council.

"I'm satisfied," he said.

Turnout disappoints Wefald

figure out ways to work together to solve a common problem, but I want actions with words."

Martin Herrera, freshman undecided, said his mother is white and his father is Hispanic, so he could identify with Raspberry's message.

"I believe in what he's saying. Because of my family being from two different backgrounds, I feel I'm stuck between two different worlds. We need to get away from cliques and work toward a common goal rather than our group goals," Herrera said.

C.L. Norton, a Manhattan resident, said he enjoys reading Raspberry's column and wasn't surprised by the high quality of the lecture.

"He's so logical. He has a delightful sense of humor and a lot of common sense, which is what we all need," Norton said.

President Jon Wefald said Raspberry had a relevant and timely message but wished more students would have attended.

McCain seats 1,800, but only 1,000 people attended the lecture, he said.

Wefald said the University shouldn't have canceled classes because they wouldn't have had any more students in the seats and the faculty would have lost a class period.

"The faculty believes that class time is sacred," he said. "If all classes were canceled, the faculty would be very displeased. When William Perry, the second or third most powerful figure in American government, was here, many students didn't take advantage of the opportunity to come."

Wefald said although he was disappointed more students didn't come, he enjoyed the lecture.

"Raspberry is a nationally respected newspaper columnist. It was an excellent presentation," Wefald said.

*Deferred Apple Computer Loan offer expires June 2, 1995. No payment of principal or interest will be required for 90 days. Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to the principal and will bear interest which will be included in the repayment schedule. Monthly payment is an estimate based on a total loan amount of $2,030.69, which includes a sample purchase price of $1,919 and a 6.0% loan origination fee for the Performa 6115 system shown above. The monthly payment for the total loan amount described above would have been $34. The interest is variable based on the commercial paper rate plus 5.35%. For example, the month of February 1995 had an interest rate of 11.57% with an Annual Percentage Rate (APR) of 13.32%. The monthly payment and the APR shown assumes 90-day deferment of principal and interest as described above, and no other deferment of principal and does not include state sales tax. Product prices, product availability, loan amounts and sales taxes may vary. The Apple Computer Loan has an 8-year loan term with no prepayment penalty and is subject to credit approval. Prequalification expedites the loan process but does not guarantee final loan approval. © 1995 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. ▶ CULTURAL NIGHT

Experience Taiwan

Event displayed Taiwan's culture, promoted mutual understanding

ANDY BARTLETT
Collegian

People from as far away as Kansas City came to Manhattan to get a taste of Taiwanese food and culture.

At Manhattan Middle School, the Taiwanese Student Association put on its first Taiwanese Cultural Night Saturday evening.

Chwen Sheu, assistant professor in management and co-host of the evening's events, said the Taiwanese students and faculty on campus had run into many questions about their country and culture.

"We didn't feel like we were doing enough to promote a mutual understanding among our peoples," Sheu said. "We want to try and deliver a message about the friendship developing between Americans and Taiwanese."

Guests at the event were immediately greeted by some of the culture Sheu referred to. The guests were met at the door by two girls in traditional Taiwanese costumes.

The first event of the evening was a home-cooked meal prepared by Taiwanese students. The dinner was a sampler plate of almost a dozen different foods. The plate included braised chicken, beef and carrots over rice, shrimp and noodles, an egg roll, fortune cookies and almond cookies.

After dinner, there was an exhibition of different artifacts from Taiwan. There was a variety of pamphlets, books and brochures on every subject from music, medicine, food, and festivals to why the U.N. should accept Taiwan as a member nation.

There were also samples of Taiwanese clothing and accessories, and a display of ornately painted and detailed opera masks.

There was also a cultural show, which included traditional dances of the Taiwanese culture and a slide show.

The slide show was titled "The Tour of Taiwan R.O.C. (Republic of China)." The show focused on the beautiful scenery and landscapes in Taiwan, a country one-sixth the size of Kansas that is populated by nearly 25 million people.

The main part of the show focused on a comical representation of the first meeting between Sheu and Dennis Krumwiede, instructor in management. Taking the stage to the sound of Henry Mancini's "Pink Panther," Krumwiede began asking Sheu all sorts of questions that might be asked by a person who knew nothing of Taiwan.

Sheu said Taiwan is a large trading partner with the United States and buys millions of dollars of Kansas wheat each year.

Following the comic introduction, there was another slide show giving more details about Taiwan. The second slide show included a brief history of the country and showed some of the foreign powers that have occupied the country over the last 2,000 years.

Also covered in the show were Taiwan's national festivals. Many of them are similar to traditional Western holidays. The New Year's Festival is similar to Christmas in terms of the Western tradition of gift-giving, and the Fall Festival is similar to Thanksgiving. In the Fall Festival, people show their appreciation for the recent food harvests.

Following the slide show, there was a series of traditional Taiwanese dances. The first, performed by 10 members of the Taiwanese Student Association, featured elaborate costumes and precise, energetic movements. The dancers had bells on their wrists and ankles, and they banged sticks together as part of the routine.

Krumwiede pointed out the similarity of this dance to those performed by American Indians.

The second dance was performed by a group of children from the Manhattan Mandarin School. This school of more than 30 children was set up by Taiwanese families in Manhattan who were concerned about passing their culture to their children.

The children's dance, a mock marriage ceremony conducted on a rainy day, featured 15 children from the school. The costumes used in the dance performances were made by the wives of faculty members, Sheu said.

Following the dance performances, there was a demonstration of the mantis form of martial art. The mantis form was developed by imitating how a mantis catches bugs, Sheu said.

"In the mantis form, a fighter will use the arms and hands to capture and defeat an enemy," he said.

STUDENT ELECTIONS '95

A-campaigning we will go

With the runoff election on Wednesday, the candidates started posting signs on campus Sunday. Jeff Peterson and Liz Ring advanced into the runoff last Wednesday. Peterson received 1,067 votes, and Ring received 915 votes. Students may go to the polls from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday in the K-State Union. Veterinary medicine students can vote from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in Trotter Hall. You will need a student ID to vote.

▶ BICYCLE SAFETY

Program ends; parents, schools may take over

STEVEN YOUNG
Collegian

A bicycle-safety campaign aimed at area children is coming to an end — at least temporarily.

During the past two years, more than 900 Manhattan-area youths have received reduced-price bicycle helmets as protection from bike-related injuries and deaths.

Manhattan Parks and Recreation was organizing the local effort through a national grant given to the Kansas Department of Health and Environment and the Kansas Department of Transportation.

The campaign was part of the national Safe Kids program.

However, Parks and Recreation has chosen not to participate any longer. Instead, it hopes parent-teacher organizations at local schools will fill the hole, Karen Perry, recreation supervisor, said.

"I think we've done our job as far as the education part, and it's time to let someone else take it over," she said.

Because of their frequent contact with children, Parks and Recreation departments statewide were sought as helmet distributors, Perry said.

Making helmets accessible to low-income families was a primary focus of Parks and Recreation's effort, Perry said.

"We decided we would like to participate in it because it allowed getting helmets out into the community," she said.

"It has been very positive in that respect, because we have been able to do a community service for people."

The cooperation of The Pathfinder made it possible to sell helmets at discounted prices.

Dave Colburn, manager of The Pathfinder, said his business was a liaison between Bell Helmets and Parks and Recreation.

Bell Helmets has a program called Cycle Right. The intent of the program is to get helmets on people, particularly those who might not be able to afford them, Colburn said.

Through Bell Helmet's program, The Pathfinder was able to buy helmets at a reduced price. Then The Pathfinder would sell the helmets to Parks and Recreation at cost. Finally, the helmets got to the children without a price markup, Colburn said.

Children whose families qualify for free or reduced-price school lunches paid $5. Helmets cost $13 for all other children, Perry said.

Prices were just a little less than at Wal-Mart or Kmart, even during a sale, she said.

"I think since we were able to offer them at a lower price, people looked at it and said, 'Yes, we should get these,'" Perry said.

Most of the buyers were middle-income families whose children still qualify for free or reduced-price school lunches, she said.

Elephant overpopulation studied

EARTH 25th Anniversary DAY

CARRIE COX
Collegian

Editor's note: This is the first in a six-part series about K-State professors who are working on research projects or have developed inventions to preserve and protect the environment.

The Chobe National Park in Botswana, Africa, is getting crowded.

The 30-mile by 60-mile park in northern Botswana is home to mammals such as the lion, wildebeest and cape buffalo, along with a variety of plants and vegetation.

It comfortably holds 25,000-30,000 elephants. The problem is the park is home to nearly 55,000 elephants.

Charles Bussing, professor of geography, and Duane Nellis, associate dean of arts and sciences and professor of geography, are looking to see if the overpopulation really is a problem.

Bussing and Nellis are using a satellite to determine how to approach the situation.

"The satellite provides us with a synoptic, regional view of all the damaged areas so we can understand how the elephants are affecting the area," Bussing said.

The professors are working through the Agency for International Development, which assists individual countries in projects such as economic development, socioeconomic advances and environmental concerns.

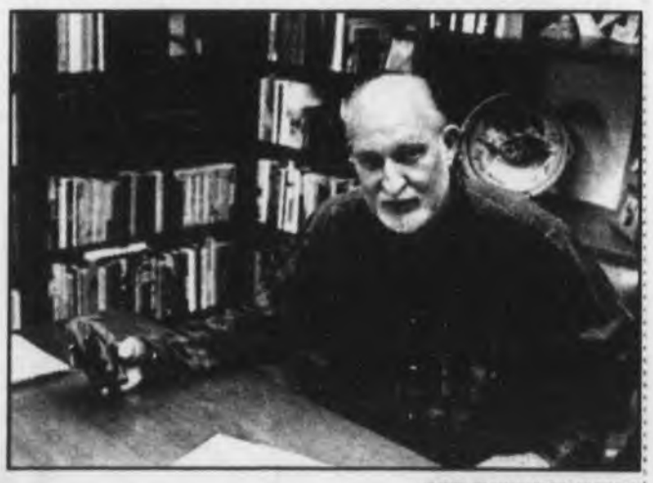
Nellis said the elephants are so abundant in Botswana is because culling is illegal.

In other African countries, where elephants can be considered endangered, elephants are culled, or slaughtered, because of their ivory tusks and for medicinal purposes, he said.

"However, culling the elephants until their population dwindles to the appropriate number is not an answer," Nellis said.

"Elephants are a social species, and you can't just kill them off one by one. You need to destroy families, which would require a helicopter," he said.

Bussing said the results compiled from the study will give Botswana some tangible statistics and a basis to begin working on the problem.



"We're hoping to provide answers for better resource-management for the national park. We want to provide the basic information for any environmental changes that need to be made in order to have better ecosystems," Bussing said.

Bussing said the recommendations to Botswanan officials are considered and usually implemented.

"I do feel like what we are doing is making an impact, and by helping to provide the country a substantial amount of data, we can give them numbers to support the decisions they make," Bussing said.

Both the professors said the project is rewarding and that they enjoy being a part of it.

"I wouldn't be working in this field if I didn't enjoy it. Africa's an awfully long ways away not to take special enjoyment in what you're accomplishing," Bussing said.

BOB McMANIS/Collegian

Charles Bussing, professor of geography, holds a small artifact from one of his seven trips to Africa. His research includes looking at the elephant population in Botswana.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ POLICE RECEIVE INCREASE IN CAR BURGLARY REPORTS AFTER HOLIDAY

The Riley County Police received reports of 10 vehicle burglaries this weekend, and more burglaries are being reported.

Sgt. Larry Freeby of the Riley County Police said these burglaries occurred this weekend in the northeast section of the city.

"Everything from cellular phones to radar detectors was taken," Freeby said. "Most of these were in unsecured vehicles."

There are no suspects in these cases, Freeby said. However, he said juveniles are the most likely suspects because of the small area burglarized.

"There are so many of them in a close area that, whoever the suspects are, they probably got there on foot," Freeby said.

Vehicle burglaries were still being reported as students returned home from the holiday, Freeby said.

▶ 3 COMPANIES FINED FOR FAILING TO PLUG ABANDONED OIL WELLS

TOPEKA (AP) — Utility regulators have disciplined a long-distance telephone company and fined two oil companies for allegedly failing to plug abandoned wells in eastern Kansas.

The long-distance company was National Telephone Communications Inc., of Irvine, Calif. The Kansas Corporation Commission ordered it to stop doing business in the state, at least temporarily.

In Kansas, long-distance service companies must obtain a certificate to operate from the KCC. National Telephone had not done so when it began selling its services.

The KCC ordered the company to tell its customers that it did not have a certificate and to switch them to another company.

The oil companies fined were Mueller Oil and Kottwitz Oil Co.

Mueller Oil's abandoned wells were in Allen County, and it was fined $15,000.

Kottwitz Oil's wells were in Neosho County, and it was fined $5,000.

▶ SUPREME COURT TO HEAR CASE INVOLVING MINORITY POLITICAL POWER

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A hospital clerk. A college professor. A retired principal. A political consultant. Friends and neighbors. These are folks who just might change political maps across the country.

This week, the U.S. Supreme Court hears arguments in the congressional reapportionment that Susan Singleton, Gary Stokley, Ed Adams and Ray Hays III challenged in 1992.

The four residents of Lincoln Parish are going to Washington together to hear it.

"I haven't ever been to the Supreme Court on a case, and I doubt if I'll ever go again. The uniqueness of that is hard to pass by," Stokley, a sociology professor at Louisiana Tech, said.

The question: Did creating a second majority-black district in Louisiana corral so many black voters that it effectively disenfranchised whites in that district and blacks in the five majority-white districts?

Wednesday's hearing could bring a key decision on the government's power to give minorities more political clout.

It could also resolve conflicting interpretations of a 1993 Supreme Court ruling that election districts designed to benefit racial minorities can violate voters' equal-protection rights.

Similar congressional redistricting disputes from Texas and North Carolina are pending before the court. A Georgia case also will be heard Wednesday.

Louisiana has long had one district that is 60-percent black covering the New Orleans area. The Legislature in 1992 created the new 4th District, which is roughly 55-percent black.

▶ UN DISCOVERS IRAQI PLANS TO BUILD BOMB

LONDON (AP) — U.N. experts trying to unravel Saddam Hussein's nuclear program got a lucky break: They stumbled on a half-ton of documents that described Iraqi plans for building a bomb.

Biological and chemical weapons inspectors were not so lucky. They never found any secret documents, and the Iraqis did not turn over any files, so the full scope of Baghdad's biological and chemical warfare activities probably will remain a mystery.

As diplomats from 175 nations gather at the United Nations today to try to keep the lid on nuclear weapons in the 21st century, Iraq offers the best example of the difficulties in controlling the spread not just of atomic arms but of all weapons of mass destruction.

Iraq used chemical weapons against Iran in the 1980s, and there were fears it would use them during the 1991 Gulf War. But it was the discovery of Iraq's secret nuclear program after the Gulf War that shocked and galvanized the international community.

CORRECTION

■ In Friday's Collegian, it was incorrectly reported in the police reports that Cindy Stoffel filed a theft report for a stolen 20-inch freestyle boy's bicycle and a redline bra. The report should have said redline bike. Also, Stoffel's name was misspelled as Staffel.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

Proposal would allow tribes to have casinos

Legislature will consider compact later this month

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Last year, the state's four tribes had big plans for a proposed Indian-gaming compact — a 40-acre park with a 300-room hotel and casino in Kansas City, Kan., organized around a 1870s Western and Native American village theme.

This year at least two of the three tribes entering into a compact with the state are waiting to have the compact approved before they make any plans for casinos or sign any contracts with casino-management companies.

The Legislature has rejected two compacts to allow the tribes to have casinos.

The governor has drafted three identical compacts the Legislature will consider in its wrap-up session later this month. The Sac and Fox, Potawatomi and Iowa Indian nations could each have a casino on reservation land — all of which is in northeast Kansas — under the compacts.

The state's fourth Indian nation, the Kickapoo Tribe, is monitoring the compacts before deciding whether to join.

Laura Abeyta, chairwoman of the Prairie Band Potawatomi Indian Gaming Commission, said she was pleased with the new proposal and its requirement that the casino be on reservation land.

"Our people wanted it that way, anyway," she said.

The Potawatomi tribe wants casinos to provide jobs for its members, many of whom live on the reservation. The revenue also would help finance benefits, such as a retirement home, for tribal members.

The casino planned under this proposal would start small, Abeyta said.

"I'm not envisioning anything superfantastic," she said.

Abeyta said the tribe also would like to hire a manager rather than signing a management contract.

"We want our tribe to reap the benefits," she said. "A lot of Indian casinos have made management companies rich."

Joan Rebar, chairwoman for the Sac and Fox Nation of Missouri in northeast Kansas and southeast Nebraska, said the casinos would give the Sac and Fox a chance to raise money for health and education benefits and develop long-term programs to support the tribe's members in the future.

"It's a short-term fix to establish long-term economic development," she said.

Many of the tribe's members do not live on the reservation, so the money raised by a casino would be given to Sac and Fox members scattered throughout the United States.

She said the Indian nations have worked with the state to meet both state and federal laws, which allow blackjack, poker, craps, roulette, baccarat and wheel of fortune.

The tribe originally had asked that slot machines be included in the compact.

But because state law doesn't allow slot machines, Rebar said, the provision was removed from the compact.

Under the federal Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, or IGRA, a state is required to negotiate a compact allowing Indian tribes to have the same gambling regulated by the state.

For the Legislature to reject a third compact would be an act of bad faith, which could prompt a second lawsuit against the state on the issue, she said.

"I'm sure that will be an option that we will pursue," Rebar said.

A representative for the Iowa tribe refused to comment on Friday because he was at his home in Nebraska and not at his office in Kansas.

Another option would be to negotiate a compact with the federal government.

According to IGRA, if the state disregards a lawsuit, the case goes to the Department of Interior. The federal government can then negotiate a compact with the Indian nations.

The Potawatomi tribe will pursue that option if the Legislature rejects the compacts for a third time, Abeyta said.

Since the tribes began their push for a state compact to allow casino gambling about four years ago, non-Indian gambling has grown somewhat in Kansas and even more in surrounding states.

Rebar said she thinks Indian gaming will eventually lose out to growing non-Indian gaming. But until then, she said, her tribe will work to reap the same benefits Kansas and other states have harvested from gaming dollars.

Get informed on Peterson, Ring runoff

We've said it once, and we'll say it again — get informed and involved.

Round Two.

The student body presidential runoff election is Wednesday.

Are you informed about the two candidates in the runoff?

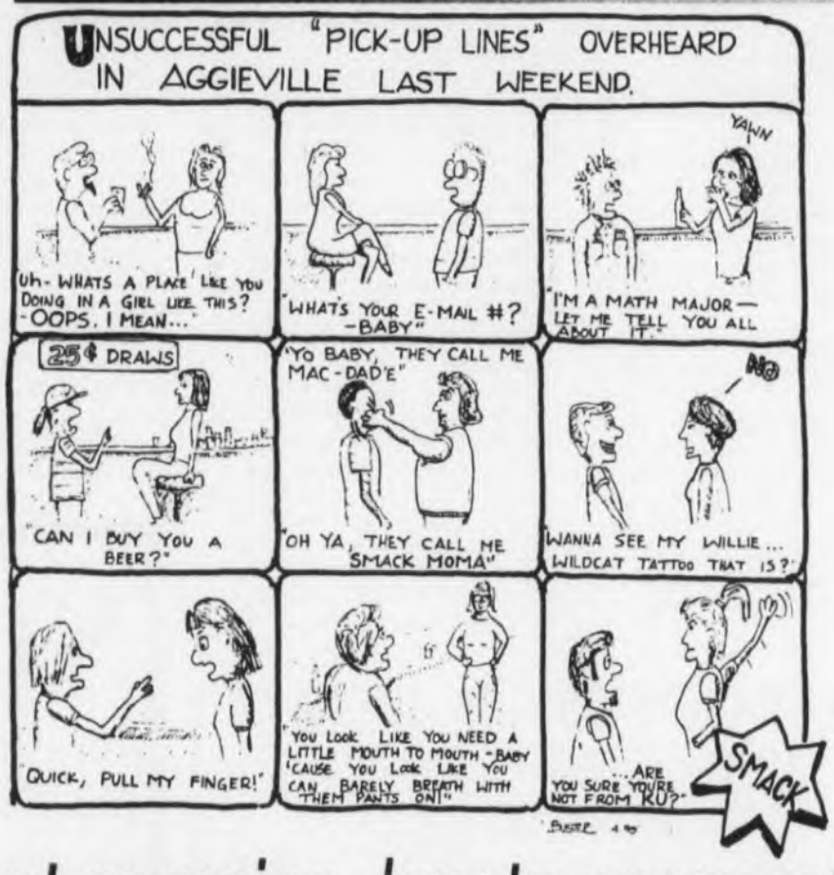
Are you even going to vote?

We've said it once, and we'll say it again — get informed and involved.

We don't mean looking for information on campaign signs on the trees around campus.

Read the candidates' platforms. Find out the issues. Make the issues. Demand answers to your questions.

There is no doubt the candidates will be making the rounds to campus groups in the next few days. Seek out the candidates.



The Collegian and DB92's "A Purple Affair" are sponsoring a presidential debate from noon to 1 p.m. on Tuesday in the Union Courtyard. No admission will be charged. Coat and tie is not required. Questions for the candidates will be necessary.

The student body president represents us, the students, to the administration, other colleges, the Kansas Board of Regents and the Kansas Legislature.

Could Jeff Peterson continue to serve as our president? Could Liz Ring represent the K-State campus as president?

There are so many questions, and only you can find the answers out for yourself.

▶ FORUM ON JESUS

Columnist displays plenty of public piety himself

Dear editor,

I am writing in response to Scott Allen Miller's column about the Forum on Jesus. I have not been on any planning committee for the forum; in fact, I have only been to one of the events. I went to hear Congressman Sam Brownback speak about "Leadership and the person of Jesus." Miller made an excellent point about the greatest commandments Jesus said:

"Love the Lord God with all your heart, with all your soul and with all your mind. The next is to love your neighbor as you love yourself."

"Are you not showing a public display of piety by dropping verses, claiming you know what is right and insulting another person in front of a 20,000-member audience? "

DEREK KRIEFELS

Congressman Brownback spoke a lot about this verse. Having morals and values in everyday life and attempting to unconditionally love people was the underlying point in his presentation. The coolest thing about Brownback is that he did not criticize any Christian group, religion or political affiliation.

I do not consider myself a part of the "right wing of the church." I consider myself to be a part of the body of Christ and a person who is trying to live a Christ-centered life. I have never been involved with any of the organizations such as ICTHUS, InterVarsity or Campus Crusade because I, too, feel that these groups cater to the students who have been churchgoers their entire lives and so many times these group members can get so wrapped up in their rules they lose focus of Jesus.

Miller talks of John Hart almost like a K-State version of David Koresh. Hart is not any kind of prophet or modern-day Moses like Miller makes him sound. If there are students in the Christian community who view Hart like that, then they should turn their focus from him to Jesus. John Hart is imperfect. He makes mistakes. He is human. Jesus is divine. No person should ever put their ultimate trust in anyone except for Jesus Christ.

The majority of people who listen when John Hart talks are probably attracted to his gentle spirit and his genuine love for his fellow man. Hart might not agree with the views, beliefs or actions of a person, but I know he does attempt to love all unconditionally.

I'm only curious why Miller never brought some of these concerns to Hart before the forum started. The Collegian advertised it at least once a week. No one except Miller can understand his true intentions of writing his column. Was it really to raise more questions concerning the whole Christian issue? Was it to promote Jesus? Was it to get one ahead of John Hart? The column sounds hostile toward Hart to me. Are you not showing a public display of piety by dropping verses, claiming you know what is right and insulting another person in front of a 20,000-member audience?

▶ BAND

Thanks to everyone who contributed to season

Dear editor,

Now that the Final Four is the Final One, it's time to look back at our K-State basketball season and thank some very important people.

The 'Cat Band, Classy Cats and cheerleaders are a group of very dedicated K-State students who support both the men's and women's basketball teams. These students have given countless hours, their energy and enthusiasm day in and day out. These students represent all walks of academic life here at K-State. They receive no scholarships or incentives for their efforts — they do it because they want to support K-State basketball and their fellow students.

In a time when society looks down at the giving aspect of our lives, it is refreshing to work with students who give so much. As Director of Bands, I appreciate all your generosity, and I thank you for a fine season.

Addressing issues, not enemies, key to cooperation

Us vs. Them.

It is a story as old as our species, and it is a story that continues to play out in the lives of LesBiGayTrans people everywhere.

But folks like me aren't the only ones living life in an "Us vs. Them" mentality.

"Us vs. Them" is an affliction that seems to have taken over our nation.

As a nation, we have developed the attitude that we are living among enemies.

Our whole society "seems to be disintegrating into special interests," said Washington Post columnist William Raspberry when he gave the 101st Landon Lecture at K-State last week.

"Some of us are angry and ought to be," Raspberry said, "that our academic texts and teachings disregard or underestimate our part," speaking of the influences of minorities and special-interest groups on the fabric of our culture.

"Some of us are disappointed that what we bring to the smorgasbord is often undervalued, even brutally rejected," Raspberry said.

LesBiGayTrans people certainly know what he is talking about.

But Raspberry argued that lack of inclusion is not grounds for creating an atmosphere of separateness and exclusion.

We shouldn't be fostering an "Us vs. Them" mentality. We need to continue to work for inclusion even in the face of oppression.

But "don't demonize those who oppose you" was at the heart of Raspberry's message.

Intellectually, I understand Raspberry's thoughts on this matter. On a certain level, his words resonated with me.

But emotionally, it is so hard not to cultivate an "Us vs. Them" mentality in retaliation when that attitude is directed toward you.

When you spend your life as a victim, when you are called a "them" all the time, when you are demonized as something evil, it is too easy — indeed, it is human — to retaliate in kind.

An eye for an eye.

Respond to hate with hate.

It is far too easy to look at those who oppose LesBiGayTrans people and make them enemies to vanquish.

"Enemies," Raspberry said, "have to be sought out, branded and punished. Which, naturally, gives them one more reason to find an opportunity to strike back at us. And the beat goes on."

And that, Raspberry said, is what is tearing our country apart — special interests and factions that spend far too much time making each other out to be enemies instead of working to solve the problems that face us. We've been blaming each other for what's wrong instead of being truly concerned about real and substantial issues.

KEVYN JACOBS

If I were the paranoid type, I'd almost say it sounded like a conspiracy to divide and conquer.

Keep the groups fighting each other so common goals aren't addressed.

But I know that in reality it's just basic human nature at work. Fortunately, it is a part of human nature that we can overcome if we only decide we want to.

We LesBiGayTrans people have allowed ourselves to play this game for far too long. I know I certainly have.

It is time for us LesBiGayTrans people to stop looking for enemies and start looking at ways to improve ourselves and the common good.

So I would like to extend the first olive branch here.

I have tried to avoid pointing fingers in my columns, and I have tried to avoid falling into the "Us vs. Them" trap. It certainly hasn't always shown, though.

At times, I have been successful in my efforts. At other times, I have not.

I would now like to make this public pledge:

I will strive to stay away for the "Us vs. Them" mentality that so many LesBiGayTrans people, including myself, have fallen into. In my stridency for equality, I will make sure I don't stride on others.

I will try to avoid demonizing those who, for sincere religious, moral or personal reasons, have demonized me. It will be difficult for me, I will certainly admit. But not impossible.

I can only hope that other LesBiGayTrans people can have the courage to strive to do the same.

Living is hard enough when you are feeling hated.

It only gets worse when you start to hate back.

Environmental concerns often a media myth

Earth Day has become the symbol of American ideology and self-hate.

Americans have a lustful desire to see themselves as evil. We cannot accept the fact that Utopia and perfection are not realistic perceptions of America.

The Earth is important to all life, and that should be in no way discounted, but we should also carefully consider all those ideas presented to us by Earth Day participants.

We are not destroyers of the environment, as many would have us believe.

Are we being lied to?

Are we being fooled into thinking we are destroying the environment?

The resounding answer is yes!

A good example is the northern spotted owl, which is on the endangered species list. This prevents logging in some parts of Oregon.

The fact is the northern spotted owl also lives in other forests in rather large numbers — numbers large enough to justify the bird's removal from the endangered species list.

I was unaware until I did research into the environmental movement that location alone can alter a species.

Using this system, every time an animal was moved from one zoo to another, it would become another species.

Another sampling of the extreme scare tactics used by environmentalists is the Alar scare. Alar is a pesticide used on most apples.

Environmentalists created a huge frenzy in regard to Alar causing cancer.

It was later shown that one would need to consume a semi trailer load of apples during a 24-hour period in order to get cancer from Alar.

Many environmentalists have encouraged government involvement in these issues.

Recent government involvement has given us clear warning signs that the government isn't able to regulate most environmental issues in an effective manner.

The law allows the government to take land for forests, parks, roads and other government projects without permission from the owner of the property. The government is required to pay for the land, but only what the government deems it to be worth.

Part of the goal for this legislation was to help protect land and animals that have the potential to be harmed by the activities of humans.

KATHLEEN MASTIO

One of the key lobbyists for this bill has now reversed her stance.

She changed her mind when the ranch that had been in her family for 100 years was taken to expand a national park.

Is this the kind of power we want our government to have?

Do we want our government to be able to take anything and everything without any justification?

Recently, the U.S. government has passed regulation on toilets to help conserve water.

On the outside, this appears to be a good idea. Unfortunately, these newly designed toilets don't have enough pressure to flush properly.

Although improper flushing might seem like a joke, it can mean a call to the plumber about once a week.

The government has been busy creating new expenses for the American taxpayer.

Environmentalists have also been concerned with deforestation and abuse of natural resources for a long time.

These concerns are unwarranted because they fail to take into account the basic principle of supply and demand.

The media have aided in spreading unsustainable information about the environment.

From the ozone to Greenhouse gases, we have heard ecological theory espoused by environmentalists.

There are as many scientists who believe that the Greenhouse Effect is a fraud as there are scientists who believe in it.

We haven't established what the facts are. Legislation should be delayed until there is some consensus on the facts.

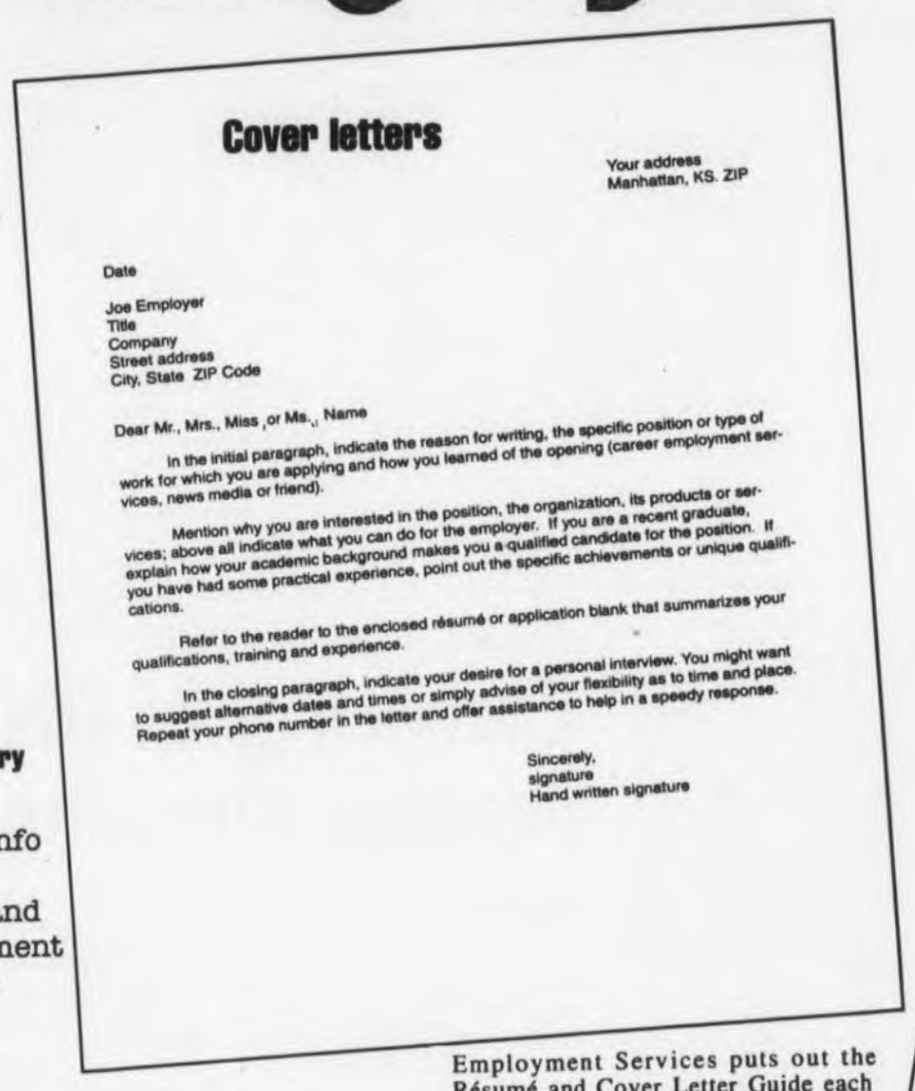
There are facts about most of these topics that very few people ever hear.

The hole in the ozone layer has been there for thousands, if not millions, of years. We have only acquired the technology to detect it recently.

The ozone layer is in a teardrop shape, which is weakest at the two poles. The force of the solar winds are likely to cause holes in the ozone layer over time.

Another useful fact, as we consider the alleged plight of the environment, is the fact that the No. 1 component of smog is ozone. If solving the ozone problem is a personal goal, one should find a way to move the ozone in smog back to the layer surrounding the Earth.

Aside from all of that, it is arrogant to think we could destroy something God created.



Evolution even suggests that our controlling Mother Earth is arrogant. Dinosaurs were eliminated, and the Earth went on, and the Earth will go on long after we have gone the way of the Dodo.

Story by Cary Conover

Source info from Career and Employment Services

Finding a job can put a lot of stress on people.

That stress can be lessened, however, with a good résumé and cover letter.

Marcia Schuley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said although it's important for students to have good résumés, a résumé alone will not land a job for a student.

"A résumé will not get you a job," she said. "Hopefully, it gets you an interview.

"The goal of the résumé is to open the door to the interview," she said.

By providing résumé critiques and offering mock interviews, Career and Employment Services has helped many students improve their résumés and interviewing skills.

When critiquing a résumé, Schuley said she looks for different things.

When looking at students' past experiences, she asks what problems were encountered in particular situations at jobs, what action was taken to fix the problems and what the results were.

An easy way to remember this is by remembering the word PAR, which refers to the problem, action and results of a problem encountered in the past.

Schuley says these past experiences are what employers look for.

"The purpose of the résumé is to give the reviewer an idea of what he or she can expect in the future based on performance in the past, so you'll really want to show your successes in the past, accomplishments, the learning and the gaining," she said.

In addition to all the résumé critique sessions and mock interviews each year, Career and Employment Services puts out the Résumé and Cover Letter Guide each year. So far this year, about 3,000 guides have been given to students.

With a little help from Career and Employment Services, Lisa Link, senior in elementary education, made her résumé and sent it out to about 10 employers.

Director James Akin talked to Link and other elementary education majors and gave them tips about their résumés.

"He gave us a handout, did some overhead things and basically told us some things that would be good to have on our kind of résumés," Link said.

Link said leadership positions and involvement in activities are the kinds of things she put on her résumé because that is what employers look for.

She said the kinds of things on her résumé were the same things she was asked about during the mock interviews, which took place on campus last fall and this spring.

However, not every student is interviewed in person. This is why some students intentionally make the appearance of the résumé one that reflects a personality.

The actual appearance of a résumé depends on several factors. One is the area of study the student is in.

Schuley said the résumés of students in architecture tended to be fancier and more artistic than those of students in business or education, whose résumés were more traditional and simple.

Regardless of the area of study, it's important for students to have a consistent, clean and informative résumé for employers to notice.

"With my experiences, people will usually look at the résumé first, and if it catches their eye, then they'll move to the cover letter," Schuley said.

"The cover letter is your opportunity to tell more about yourself and particularly to connect with that particular position and to target it to the employer," she said.

She said it is important for students first and foremost to explain what position they are applying for and why they want to work for that particular company.

After those reasons are stated, Schuley said it's OK to list other reasons for applying, such as geographic location.

She said it's good to think of an employer's needs and to link skills to those needs.

According to the Resume and Cover Letter Guide, interests, personal qualities and skills are also important things to include in a résumé.

Schuley said for some students, it's especially important to list technical skills.

"When I work with architects and their knowledge of Computer Aided Design, some of that information is real important to get out there because it reduces training," she said.

For many students, a good résumé has paid off in some way or another.

Ann Scarlett, senior in economics, will be attending law school at the University of Kansas in the fall. She applied at seven schools, most of which did not require résumés of its applicants. KU did, however, require a résumé.

She agreed it was a good idea to include leadership roles and activities on the résumé.

"The résumé I've had up until this point will carry on. The major activities and leadership roles I've been involved in at K-State will still be on my résumé when I graduate from law school," Scarlett said.

K-State takes 2 of 3 from Hawks

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

Two out of three ain't bad.

K-State started the weekend on a losing note with a 4-2 loss in Lawrence. The Cats bounced back with a come-from-behind, 10-5 victory Saturday night at Frank Myers Field and continued their winning ways with a close, 7-6 win Sunday.

The Cats opened the scoring in the first with four runs and added another run in the second to take an early, 5-0 lead over the Jayhawks.

The Hawks would rebound to score four runs in the top of the fourth, knocking out the Cats' starter, Jon Oiseth.

Enter Larry Walty.

Walty entered the game with two outs and got K-State out of the inning without any more damage.

K-State coach Mike Clark said Walty's effort really impressed him.

"He's a great competitor. He's going to make them put the ball in play," said Clark, whose team raised its record to 21-16, 8-10 in the Big Eight, during the weekend series.

K-State 7
Kansas 6

The Wildcats would get two runs back in the bottom of the inning, giving them a 7-4 lead.

Kansas would add another run on the scoreboard with a Josh Igou home run into the right-field pines to make the score 7-5 Cats.

The Hawks really gave the Cats a scare in the top of the eighth when, with two outs and the tying run on second, KU's Josh Kliner stepped to the plate.

Walty then struck Kliner out with three consecutive pitches, preserving the Cats' 7-6 lead.

"I got him on two curve balls, and I didn't know whether or not to come back with another one. I threw him a curve ball and got lucky and struck him out," said Walty, who raised his record to 2-4 on the season.

After striking Kliner out, Walty gave the KU batter some choice words while heading to the dugout.

"I was being intense," Walty said.

"Being intense and talking the talk helps me out."

Clark said the strikeout was a big one that he knew Walty could get.

"It was very big," Clark said.

"He's one of those pitchers that when it is on the line, you are going to have to hit him. He's not going to give in to anyone. He's done that all season long for us."

K-State was led by Chris Bouchard's one-for-three effort, which included driving in three RBIs.

In the Cats' loss Friday, KU took an early 2-0 lead after two innings of play. The Cats would strike back thanks to an error and a passed ball, which put Brad Harker on second with no outs.

Harker would later score on a fielder's choice to make the score 2-1 Kansas.

This would be as close as the Cats would get.

KU would tag on single runs in the fifth and seventh innings, while the Cats managed one more run in the seventh to make the final score 4-2 Hawks.

Dan Rude went nine strong innings for the Hawks, raising his record to 3-2. Eric Yanz suffered the loss for the Cats and dropped his record to 3-5.

K-State got back into the win column Saturday night at Frank Myers Field.

KU took a 5-0 lead into the bottom of the eighth, but that was when the Cats opened the flood gates and scored 10 runs, which was topped off by a David Hendrix grand-slam home run to give the Cats a dramatic come-from-behind, 10-5 victory.

Jack Witt got the win for the Cats and raised his record to 3-2, and Robert Keens received the loss and dropped his record to 1-3.

Hendrix led the Cats' attack with six RBIs while going two-for-five at the plate.

Despite the two wins, Clark said the Cats need to remain focused and start winning more games on the road.

"We'll try to get one win at a time," he said. "I'm sure that the next game will be real competitive ball game, and we better be ready to play because I'm sure that they will be.

"We need to go on the road and play well," he said.

"We need to put things together on the road. This will be a challenge to the team."

3 Cats qualify for outdoor championships

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State came through with some surprises Saturday at the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla.

Despite a difficult week of training, three athletes provisionally qualified for the NCAA Outdoor Championships.

Belinda Hope took home first in the 400 meters with a time of 52.84 seconds. The clocking beat the provisional qualifying mark and was only 0.24 of a seconds away from the automatic standard.

"I got really nervous," Hope said. "I can tell when I'm going to do something good because I get really nervous."

Ed Broxterman had his best performance of his outdoor season with a leap of 7 feet 3-3/4 inches in the high jump.

It was also his first gold medal of the outdoor season.

"I was tired the day of the meet," Broxterman said. "I didn't feel that quick or springy before the event, but I felt pretty strong."

"Belinda and Ed were very good," track coach Cliff Rovelto said. "You can perform and train hard at the same time if you are good, and they are good."

The Wildcats swept both high-jump events when Wanita Dykstra captured first with a leap of 5'10". The effort bettered her provisionally qualifying mark of 5'9-1/4" at the Texas Relays April 8. Nicole Green added her name to K-State's gold-medal winners with victory in the 200 meters. She won the race with a time of 24.02.

Green and Hope then joined Linda Shea and Irma Betancourt to take first in the 1,600-meter relay.

The team crossed the line in a season-best time of 3:41.05.

K-State's distance-running squad continued to show improvement at the meet as well.

Senior Amy Marx came through with a personal best in the 3,000 meter with a time of 10:06.78 and a third-place finish.

"On the women's side, who is improving the most is Amy Marx," Rovelto said. "She's running PRs all the time, and she's really comfortable running now."

Lesley Wells and Elizabeth Betancourt placed third and fourth in the 1,500 meter.

"They are getting better, but when you are thinking in terms of placing in the top half of the conference, they still have some work to do," Rovelto said.

K-State begins competition at the 70th Annual Kansas Relays Wednesday in the heptathlon and decathlon events.

Jill Montgomery will compete in the heptathlon for K-State.

"There aren't a lot of individual events open at this meet," Rovelto said.

"If you want to get in a lot of running, you have to enter all the relays."

Preliminaries begin Friday, and the meet concludes Saturday.

▶ NFL DRAFT PREVIEW

May's cockiness could hurt his draft stock

SCOTT REYNOLDS
Collegian

Editor's note: This is the first in a four-part series on potential NFL draft picks from the K-State Wildcats.

Former K-State quarterback Chad May might have the strongest arm out of all the signal callers in the 1995 NFL draft.

May

The pro scouts like the fact that he comes from a sophisticated, passing offense.

He also might have the quickest release of the available quarterbacks.

But does he also have the biggest mouth?

That's the question most NFL teams are trying to figure out.

The media has portrayed Chad May as "the cocky quarterback from K-State." There was a report in the Feb. 20 issue of Sports Illustrated that said May came across as too cocky, telling one NFL coach he should be the first quarterback taken.

"If I'm not," May said in Sports Illustrated, "it's your mistake."

What is May's response to all of this?

"The word's going around the NFL that I've got a bad attitude," May said.

"I don't need all that bad publicity right now, but that's what is being said."

Despite his phyical skills and some impressive workouts for NFL scouts, one AFC scout is afraid May might have hurt his draft stock with his remarks.

"He reminds me of Green Bay's quarterback, Brett Favre. He's kind of mouthy, but he gets the job done," he said.

"In fact, when May gets rolling, it's hard to beat that guy."

Others in the NFL, such as Tampa Bay Buccaneer coach Sam Wyche, said they think May's talent speaks for itself.

Wyche said that May added another million dollars to his contract at the Indianapolis scouting combine workout.

If it's one thing May has learned this off-season, it's a little humility.

"I can't be running off at the mouth the way I have," May said.

"A lot of people are taking it the wrong way."

May insists his attitude is born out of confidence, not cockiness.

"That's part of my game. I like telling people I'm going to go out there and do something, and then go and do it," May said.

"I think it's fun, but it's costing me some money right now."

That may be true, but May is still considered a solid first- or second-round pick.

May said that Cleveland, Minnesota, Buffalo and Indianapolis have expressed the most interest, and he said he thinks he will end up on one of those teams.

"They pick 10, 11, 14 and 15 repectively," he said. "If I don't go to one of those teams in the first round, then your guess is as good as mine."

May leaves K-State as its most-decorated passer, with 10 Big Eight Conference records in his two years as a Wildcat.

The majority of his records will stand throughout history as the Big Eight enters its last year of existence.

"They've got one year left to do it," May said.

"Nobody can break most of them, like my consecutive games with a touchdown streak or back-to-back seasons with 2,500 passing yards."

May's dream of being an NFL quarterback could be realized on Saturday, when the NFL conducts its draft of college players.

"I'm going into the NFL confident," May said.

"If I fall on my face, then everybody can laugh at me, but if I don't, then I can tell them, 'I told you so.'"

Canseco gives striking umpires some support

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Jose Canseco lent his support to the locked-out major-league umpires Sunday night, joining their picket line before Boston's exhibition game against Texas.

Canseco took part in the informational picketing, even hanging a sign around his neck, before leaving to play for the Red Sox.

"You saw what the game was like without the real players. It's going to be the same thing without the real umpires," Canseco said.

Eight umpires walked the picket lines before the game, which was televised by ESPN. They wore signs that said "Scabs Go Home," and "Major League Umpires are Locked Out," and handed out leaflets that began "We love the great game of Baseball!!!"

But they attracted little attention until Canseco came out.

"He didn't have to do this," AL umpire Vic Voltaggio said.

Canseco said he didn't know the umpires would be picketing until he got a message in the clubhouse from AL umpire John Hirschbeck, a friend whom he has worked with on charity events.

"I don't know how much it's going to affect their negotiations," Canseco said. "I would love to have an impact."

"It goes to show you right there that one of the prime players in the game is standing behind us," Hirschbeck said. "The bottom line is we're all professionals. The same way that we don't want scab players out there, they don't want scab umpires."

Canseco, believed to be the first big-leaguer to walk the picket line with the umpires, said spending eight months on strike helped him appreciate the umpires' plight.

"You always argue balls and strikes in the heat of the moment. This is different," he said. "You're talking about people's livelihoods."

Umpires are asking for a 53-percent raise over four years. Owners have offered about 12 percent.

Also, the umpires want to be paid more for working twice as many playoff games because of baseball's new divisional format.

Many managers and players have complained about the quality of the umpiring this spring.

Red Sox manager Kevin Kennedy complained about several blown calls in Saturday's game — even some that went in his favor.

Netters end losing streak with win against Cyclones

BRIAN THOMAS
Collegian

There's no place like the road.

For the K-State tennis team, a late-season road swing may be the best cure to stop its losing streak.

After dropping four straight home matches in Big Eight Conference play, the Wildcats took a step in the right direction Sunday in Ames, Iowa, with a 7-2 victory over the Iowa State Cyclones.

With the win, the Cats improved to 8-10 on the season and 2-4 in conference play. The Cyclones dropped to 5-11, 1-4 in the Big Eight.

Iowa State appears to be a nice target for K-State. Last season, the Wildcats produced only two victories in conference play. One of them was a 5-0 win against the Cyclones at the Big Eight Tournament. The Cats got Easter Sunday off to a good start, capturing four singles matches.

K-State's top-ranked player, Karina Kuregian, got back to her usual winning style with a 6-2, 6-2 victory against Erika Asmuss.

Kuregian, the No. 13 singles player in the country, rebounded from her disappointing 6-4, 3-6, 6-1 loss to the nation's No. 9-ranked player, Nora Koves of Kansas. The conference's Netter of the Week improved her season mark to 25-6. Karen Nicholson claimed a 6-1, 6-1 No. 2 singles victory againstKirsten Fagen. Dinah Watson posted a 6-4, 6-4 win against Angie Miller in No. 3 singles. Chris Schulte finished off Mollie Racette 6-3, 6-1 in No. 4 singles.

The Wildcats took a clean sweep in the doubles division for the seventh time this season.

The No. 14-ranked team of Kuregian and Martine Shrubsole extended its winning streak to four matches with an easy 6-3, 6-2 victory against Asmuss and Miller.

Kuregian and Shrubsole, winners of 14 of their last 15 matches, pushed their No. 1 doubles record to 18-2.

In No. 2 doubles, Nicholson and Watson dropped the opening set before storming back for a 5-7, 6-2, 6-2 win over Rydell and Backhaus. Schulte and Nikki Lagerstrom completed the sweep with a 6-3, 2-6, 6-2 victory against Fagen and Racette.

The Wildcats wrap up regular-season conference play today in Lincoln, Neb., against the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

With a win, K-State would secure the fifth seed in the upcoming Big Eight Tournament in Oklahoma City.

Reader challenges Cassie's advice

Dear Cassie,

My friend and I would like to comment on your column from Tuesday. Are you implying that it is OK to date your professor if you are presently taking his or her class if he or she is a graduate student?

Dating a professor is wrong and immoral regardless of whether the professor is a grad student.

Signed, The Liberal and her Red-Headed Sidekick

Dear Lib and Red,

Dating a professor or a graduate student when you are in his or her class or when he or she is in any kind of position to influence your grade is unethical.

I don't feel it is immoral to date someone if he or she is free, but in the academic community, there are unspoken rules that frown on profs dating students. These don't exist between grads and undergrads.

Band treats fans to night of blues in Aggieville

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

Kansas City has a long tradition of being a great place to hear blues music.

Saturday night, Manhattan blues fans didn't have to go any further than Aggieville to experience the Kansas City sound. Big John and the 39th Street Blues Band played to a packed house at Rowdy Trouty's.

From slow, soulful songs of misplaced love to upbeat numbers packed with sexual innuendo, Big John and the rest of the band seemed to know just how to please the crowd.

Founder, keyboardist, and lead vocalist John Amaro said the band was named after the location of an old blues bar in Kansas City.

The band plays regularly in Kansas City and has played twice in Manhattan. Two of the band members, however, were making a sort of homecoming with Saturday's performance.

"Back when I was a kid, I used to play almost every club around here," Amaro said. "There was a club called the Third Semester out by Wamego that was a college hangout where we played six nights a week."

Saxophonist Kenny Glover was also making a return to his old stomping ground. Glover played football for K-State in the late '80s until he hurt his knee. After the injury, Glover began concentrating full time on his music.

The band, which has had several different line-ups since its inception, now consists of Amaro on keyboards and lead vocals, Glover on sax and alto sax, Johnny Isom on guitar and vocals, and Ernie Cordero on drums.

Throughout the night, the group alternated between original material and classic covers from artists like Robert Cray. The intimate setting made for the ideal atmosphere in which to hear the blues. It didn't take long for the area in front of the stage to fill with people grooving along with the music.

The highlight of the night's performance might have been a song featuring Glover on the alto sax. Glover wandered off stage, walking through the crowd while people looked on in amazement, trying to figure out how he got such sounds to emanate from his horn.

Near the end of the song, Glover played a note that lasted more than two minutes. The longer he played, the more people crowed around Glover, as if to see if there were some sort of trickery involved. As the note tapered off, the rest of the band joined the fray with a monstrous jam, and the crowd signaled its approval with a spontaneous burst of applause.

"This is great. I'm really impressed with this band," said John Etzel, sophomore undecided and keyboardist for the local band Six Minutes Down. "He's got some reverb on his sax, but the things he's doing on it are incredible."

Isom said he and Amaro have been playing together for years.

"It's something that I set my mind to when I was young," Isom said. "I decided that's what I want to do. You can actually make a profession out of the music business. It's not terribly financially rewarding — I still drive an '82 Chrysler — but it's what I want to do, and I'm very happy doing it."

Concert will feature 'The Planets'

MIKE HILL
Collegian

The K-State Orchestra will take a trip through the solar system for its final concert of the year.

The concert will be at 8 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium. There is no cost to attend.

The concert will begin with two award-winning soloists. Patricia Mickey, graduate student in music, will perform the first movement of Mozart's "Concerto No. 2" for horn.

Melissa Marks, graduate student in music, will play the first movement of Ravel's "Piano Concerto in G."

The orchestra will then take off on a journey in a work titled "The Planets" by Gustav Holst.

David Littrell, conductor of the orchestra, said this is the end of a tough year.

"We've played some difficult concerts this year, but I hope they have all grown from it," he said.

Littrell said "The Planets" calls for an unusually large orchestra, which made the concert even harder to prepare for.

"The problem was really just getting all the extra instruments," he said.

Littrell said the audience might not have heard some of the instruments.

"We are using a bass flute, which is an unusual instrument," he said.

The orchestra will only perform four of the seven movements because of time constraints, Littrell said.

Post office makes paying taxes fun

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNDATED — For $1, taxpayers in Santa Rosa, Calif., will have the pleasure of throwing a pie in the face of an IRS agent.

It's part of a trend by the U.S. Postal Service to arrange fun for folks making the trek to post offices to meet the tax deadline.

Today is the big day for most of the nation, delayed from the normal April 15 because it fell on the weekend. Taxpayers in New England and upstate New York, who send their returns to Andover, Mass., have until midnight Tuesday because today is a state holiday in Massachusetts.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Cultural night ends with fashion show

Jane Hsu, the performer, used very elaborate, flowing arm and hand movements, accenting them by stomping a foot on the ground during a turn or strike.

The next part of the performance was a musical presentation featuring the vocals of C. C. Ma, graduate student in biochemistry, and Chi-Wei Lin, graduate student in counselor education.

Margery Neely, professor in counselor education and one of Lin's instructors, attended the cultural night as a guest of Lin and another of her students.

"I've visited the Far East several times and think that their cultural beauty is just magnificent," Neely said.

Ming-Tie Huang, graduate student in physics, played the pi-pa, a traditional Chinese musical instrument.

Following the song presentation, Huang entertained the audience with a pi-pa solo. Huang said he has been playing this traditional stringed instrument for more than 10 years after picking it up at a music club at school.

Huang said the song he played was a dance song about men and women in love dancing under the moonlight.

The final event of the evening was a fashion show of traditional Taiwanese costumes.

The Taiwanese Student Association sold more than 420 tickets to the cultural night.

"Since it's Easter weekend, we didn't expect so many people to show up," Lin said. "We've got people here from as far away as Kansas City."

Helmets meet standards

"These helmets are first quality for safety," Colburn said.

"They meet the most stringent standards," he said.

Aside from selling helmets, children were taught the importance of being protected when they bike, Perry said.

Parks and Recreation also has taught children how to wear helmets and has fitted helmets for the children, she said.

All local schools have been invited to continue the program, but only Amanda Arnold Elementary School has shown interest, Perry said.

Twenty-five helmets were sold in four hours during parent-teacher conferences at Amanda Arnold on April 6 and 7, said Sonya Conrad, Amanda Arnold PTO safety chairman.

The board of education has given preliminary approval for Amanda Arnold to conduct more helmet sales, Conrad said.

However, the school must first consider a possible conflict of interest, she said.

The concern is about what effect the low-cost helmets would have on businesses selling bike helmets, Conrad said.

Indeed, the program put a dent in bike helmet sales at The Pathfinder, Colburn said.

"We really want to continue to work with it, and we would probably do it only a couple times a year," Conrad said.

Colburn said the program has not been perfect.

"Probably more disadvantaged kids could have and should have gotten helmets," he said. "But that's a minor issue because, rich or poor, we want kids to be safe."

The last chance for presidential candidates to debate campus issues is from noon to 1 p.m. today in the K-State Union Courtyard.

This presidential candidate forum is the first sponsored by DB92 and the Collegian.

"We are very excited, because it proves that DB92 and the Collegian can work together," Stephen Seely, co-host of "A Purple Affair," said.

Seely will moderate the event. He will ask questions about several issues to help inform students so they are more likely to vote in the election.

"I feel there are a lot of apathetic students who don't vote or participate because they don't know the candidates or issues," Seely said.

Informing students is one of the main reasons Liz Ring says she is attending the debate.

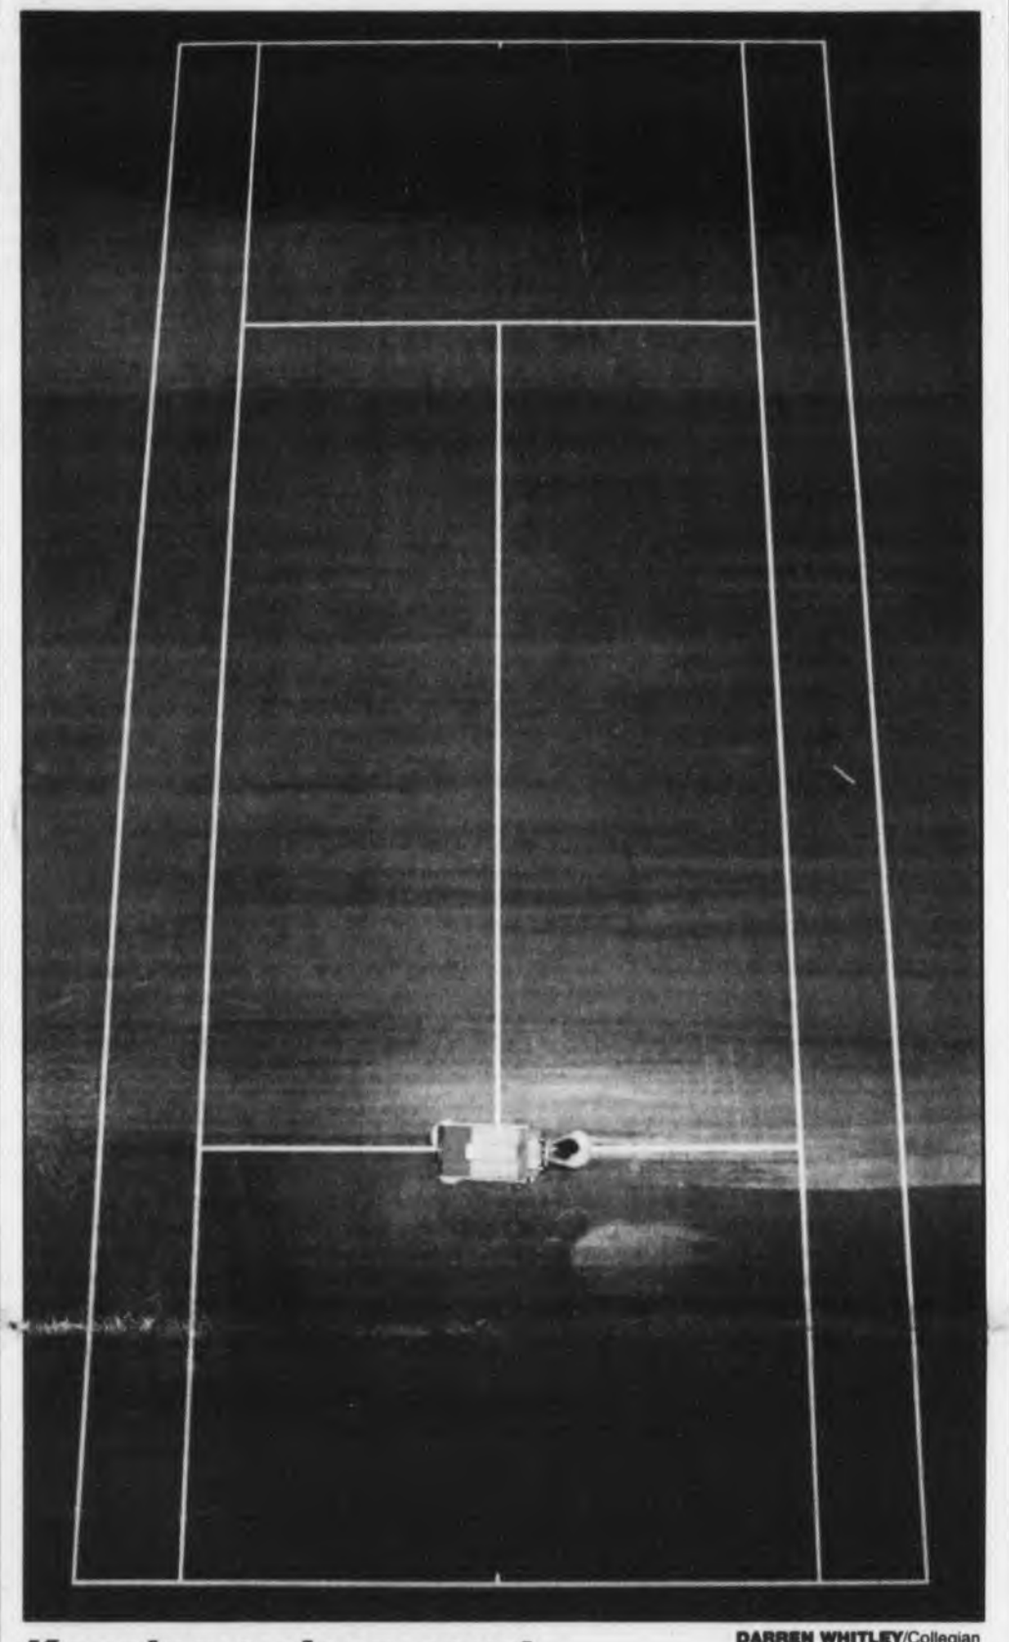
"We are going because we feel it is important for students to hear where we stand on the issues," she said.

STUDENT ELECTIONS '95

The most significant topics deal with money, Seely said.

"The two main issues that concern every student are tuition and student fees," Seely said. "That is everyone's main worry."

The candidates each have specific platforms that organizers hope to bring out during the debate, Seely said.



"Our objective is to be very specific about goals and processes of each candidate's platform," Seely said.

Organizers hope 200 students will

Working for self not impossible

LINDA HARVEY

Five years after graduation from K-State, one alumnus is selling his products all over the country.

When David Dreiling, alumnus in marketing, graduated from K-State in August of 1989, he and his former partner started It's Greek To Me.

It's Greek To Me is now selling sportswear to greeks nationwide.

But not all students who own a small business are as successful.

Jason Cox, sophomore in mechanical engineering, put flyers up on bulletin boards around campus during fall 1994. No one called him to take advantage of his computer-hardware installation and troubleshooting services.

"I think it has a lot to do with the fact that most people don't have money," Cox said.

He charged $5 for troubleshooting and $10 to $25 for different types of installations.

Cox started out working on computer systems last summer in his father's small computer business in Wichita. Unfortunately, he didn't receive as much business as his father had, and he gave up his business.

"Maybe I'll try again," he said. "I'll try something different."

Dreiling, on the other hand, didn't anticipate how fast his business would grow.

"We've grown so rapidly that it's been difficult to control that growth," he said.

Dreiling was named a finalist in Inc. Magazine's 1994 Entrepreneur of the Year contest. He was also named the 1992 Small Business Administration Kansas and Regional Entrepreneur of the Year.

Dreiling bought out his partner in 1994 and now is developing ideas relating to the Internet. He said he hopes there will be continued growth in all the markets he deals with.

Angela Cunningham, junior in business management, is in the process of creating her own business. Working with the K-State Small Business Development Center, she is currently formulating a business plan for a bridal boutique.

"I'm anxious to get started on this," she said, "but I don't plan to open for a while."

Cunningham said formulating the plan is taking a great deal of time. She is also working and taking a full class load.

"Once I'm able to set aside some time and speak some more with the SBDC, I'll be able to get started with this," she said.

The SBDC, housed in the KSU Foundation Building, offers a number of services, including training, a small business computing center and a Rural Enterprise Institute. The Center also helped Dreiling get his business off the ground.

"Most of what we do is give out information," Barta Stevenson, administrative assistant, said. "Everything we do is free and confidential."

In order to afford a business, Cunningham said she needs investors to put down the 30 percent to finance a small-business loan.

"I know people from whom I can borrow," she said. "But I won't be able to pay these people back until the loan is paid. They may have to wait five to 10 years."

Cunningham said she has wanted to start her own business for a long time.

"I wanted to get into something I'm interest-

China rejects appeal to drop reactor sale

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — China rejected Secretary of State Warren Christopher's personal appeal Monday to abandon a proposed nuclear deal with Iran. Foreign Minister Qian Qichen said international law allows cooperation in the peaceful use of nuclear energy.

Christopher, in a two-hour meeting with Qian over lunch, implored the foreign minister to drop its proposed sale of two pressurized water reactors to Iran, telling him it would be dangerous.

But Qian rebuffed Christopher, agreeing only to have U.S. and Chinese experts meet next summer for further discussions.

"There is no international law or international regulation or international agreement that prohibits such cooperation in the peaceful use of nuclear energy," Qian said.

Besides, Qian said, the project would be under the supervision of the International Atomic Energy Agency, an outside monitoring panel provided by the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Christopher voiced his plea to Qian as some 175 nations opened a month-long conference at the United Nations on extending the 25-year-old nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

The Clinton administration would like to gain China's support for indefinite extension of the treaty. Qian is expected to disclose his government's position in a speech Tuesday, and U.S. officials are hinting Beijing

▶ THEATER

Man vs. technology theme of live virtual-reality play

VIRTUAL Theatre

Information about the show has been posted on the Internet and the World Wide Web. The web site, (http://ukanaix.cc.ukans.edu:80/~mreaney/), includes software to download and run actual virtual-reality scences from the play.

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

With the click of a mouse, the world of live theater will meet the world of virtual reality for the first time tonight at the University of Kansas.

"The Adding Machine" by Elmer Rice will be performed by live actors with live technicians directing the movement of the set through Macintosh computers.

"Other groups have used some theater aspects of virtual realty, but no one has done what we are doing," said Lance Gharavi, KU graduate student in theater and the show's general factotum, or, in his words, the person who does everything.

Rice's play, written in 1923, was selected partly because of irony, Gharavi said. One basic premise of the plot deals with the replacement of a man, Mr. Zero, by technology — an adding machine.

Zero, an accountant, loses his job to the machine on the 25th anniversary of the day he began working for the company.

So he kills his boss, is tried, convicted and executed.

But his story is not over.

"We follow his life and afterlife story," Gharavi said.

Steve Willingham, sophomore in theater and film, said acting with virtual reality is more precise and planned.

"It is a lot more technical, almost like film-acting on stage," Willingham said. "You have to always be aware."

Everything has to be done exactly the same every night because the technicians take their cues to change the scenery from the speed with which the actors progress though the script, Willingham said.

In parts of the script, the actors are acting off-stage in front of a camera, and their images are projected onto a screen in front of the audience. Other actors then get the challenge of interacting with the image.

In other scenes, the actors have to actually use the images, like pretending to be sitting on projected benches.

Willingham said it is kind of like the behind-the-scenes shots of the filming of "Forrest Gump." Like "Gump," some of the off-stage work is shot by cameras in front of a green screen, then their images are interjected into the settings.

"They look at each other but not at each other," he said. "But they don't shake hands or anything."

Willingham plays the Fixer, a character he said he thinks of as an alien from outerspace. His character guides Zero through different worlds.

Besides dealing with man vs. technology issues, the play also is about choosing our fates, Willingham said.

Megan Parr, junior in theater, plays Zero's secretary who is secretly in love with him.

"Outwardly, they despise each other," she said.

When Zero is executed, she commits suicide so she can go into the afterlife and tell him she loves him.

Parr said one thing that is different about working on this play as compared to other productions is that normally, the scenery is more like a prop that blends in, and the audience forgets about it.

But in "The Adding Machine," with the set constantly changing, Parr said the actors have to be careful the setting doesn't overshadow their performances.

"Hopefully, the audience won't

Job fair to educate future workers about job market

JOE KLEIDOSTY
Collegian

The Southeast Kansas Manufacturers Roundtable will sponsor its first Southeast Kansas Job Fair and will offer more than 700 full-time jobs from more than 30 manufacturers to qualified applicants on Wednesday.

The fair will take place from 9 a.m. to noon and 1 to 3 p.m. in the Multi-Purpose Building on the campus of Labette Community College in Parsons.

Al Smith, president of Mid America Inc., said the primary goal of the fair will be to impress upon area residents, particularly young people, that there is a wealth of jobs in the area.

He also said high-school graduates are a primary target of the fair, which is why the Roundtable chose to have the fair on the same day as LCC's Senior Day.

"Our purpose is to expose a number of different elements to the community that there are jobs available," Smith said. "We want to try and demonstrate to those young people that there are jobs."

Jim Stephens, manager of customer manufacturing at Wiseda, said graduating seniors from 50 high schools have been invited to the fair.

"Manufacturers are trying to convince the youth that they do not have to leave the area to get a job," Stephens said.

Stephens said a representative from each company will be at assigned tables to answer questions.

"They will have an opportunity to talk to the person there about future employment," Stephens said. "Applications will be handed out, and questions about the position being offered can be answered."

Smith said the Roundtable, which is a non-profit organization composed of area manufacturers, came together to address some common areas of interest.

"The primary thing at this point is the job fair and the availability of manpower," he said. "There are more jobs available than there are applicants to fill them."

MORE INFO

Those seeking additional information can contact a recording about a few of the available jobs at (316) 421-3613.

Smith said he doesn't know how many people will attend this new event, but he said it has the possibility of reaching a signifi-

▶ DOGS TAKEN FROM RANCH TO CITY SHELTER; MANY STILL NEED HOMES

Pottawatomie County officials followed through with a court order to remove 40 dogs from the Pet Hotline Ranch.

Beverly Hashagen, director of the Pet Hotline Ranch, was told by Pottawatomie County officials for months to get rid of the dogs.

Pottawatomie County Sheriff Anthony Metcalf said he and three animal control officers removed 26 dogs from the ranch Friday and four more Monday.

Metcalf said rounding up the dogs was quite a chore.

"They were as wild as can be," he said.

Hashagen kept the dogs on seven acres of fenced land.

"The fence that was on sight was broken in several places," Metcalf said. "Dogs were coming and going at will."

Hashagen had a conditional-use permit from Pottawatomie County, which allowed her to house stray dogs on her ranch. Under the conditional-use permit, if the dog population exceeded 50, the county had the right to evaluate the situation.

ADOPTION

For more information on adopting a dog, call 776-6041 during the day or 537-7946 after 5 p.m.

At one point, Hashagen had about 175 stray dogs on her ranch. She said many people brought the dogs in during the flood of 1993. Through adoption and foster pet homes, Hashagen found homes for many of those dogs.

Because of the over populated ranch, Hashagen appeared in court March 26. She still had about 50 stray dogs on her property at that time. The judge ordered her to have the dogs gone by April 10.

Metcalf said the Pottawatomie officials took the dogs from the ranch to the Riley County Animal Shelter. He said he doesn't know what will happen to the dogs.

Metcalf said although the stray dogs are gone, Hashagen is able to keep her personal pets.

"She has testified she has 25 personal pets," Metcalf said.

Hashagen said she still has many dogs in pet foster homes that need adoptive families.

"We really need to get some of those out," she said. "There are many nice dogs that need homes."

Hashagen said on Sundays and Tuesdays, they will have the foster dogs all in one place, so people can look at them for adoption.

▶ WHITE MEN CLAIM DISCRIMINATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — White men who said they were victims of reverse discrimination emerged with lower-court victories intact Monday after opponents' affirmative-action challenges to the Supreme Court.

The justices let stand a lower-court ruling that a plan for promoting black firefighters in Birmingham, Ala., unlawfully discriminated against whites.

The justices also let a white man collect $425,000 from a Pittsburgh company he accused of denying him a promotion because of his race.

Neither action was a ruling. Instead, the court made no comment as it left intact federal appeals court decisions in each case.

▶ COURT DEBATES ACT INTERPRETATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, in a spirited argument over the Endangered Species Act, debated Monday whether the government for 20 years has wrongly interpreted the law to ban destruction of wildlife habitat on private property.

Eight of the nine justices fired questions at lawyers for the timber industry and the Clinton administration.

The case could lead to one of the court's most important environmental rulings since Congress passed the law in 1973.

Assistant Interior Secretary George Frampton Jr. said losing the case would make it difficult for the government to enforce the Endangered Species Act on private lands.

▶ CAPITAL TO BORROW MONEY FROM TREASURY

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's capital, known for high crime and crumbling schools alongside its monuments, lost a measure of control over its own affairs Monday.

Hoping to avert an embarrassing bankruptcy for the District of Columbia, President Clinton signed a bill to set up an oversight board with powers over Mayor Marion Barry and the city council.

The law also allows the district to borrow hundreds of millions of dollars from the federal Treasury to help pay its bills. It requires a balanced city budget in three years.

With Barry looking on, Clinton said the seat of the U.S. government should be transformed into a city that works.

▶ DALLAS COUNTY PROGRAMS CAN NO LONGER HAND OUT CONDOMS

DALLAS (AP) — For nearly a decade, doctors and nurses from around the world distributed pamphlets, needle kits and condoms in Dallas County as part of a program to teach who how to fight the spread of AIDS and other diseases.

But that was before county commissioners said county programs could no longer hand out those materials.

Now the training program, run by the county and financed by the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, is in jeopardy.

The CDC has said it will decide in two months whether the ban, effective March 21, will force it to uproot the 16-year-old training center, one of 10 it finances across the country.

Handing out literature, needle kits and condoms has been a part of the program for almost 10 years.

Professors invent detector

LUKE WEHRMAN
Collegian

This is the second in a six-part series about K-State professors who are working on research projects or have developed inventions to preserve and protect the environment.

Imagine being able to check the air quality of a home by sitting on the couch for an hour.

Chemistry professors Jack Lambert and Joseph Paukstelis have invented a personal ozone detector that can be worn as a lapel pin.

"If you wondered if your house had ozone, and you sat and watched television all day and had this pinned to your jacket, it would give you a value," Lambert said.

EARTH 25th Anniversary DAY

Lambert said the the actual badge is a small piece of plastic, which can be pinned to clothing.

A small card, which resembles a regular business card, slides into the badge.

On the card is a circle spot with a reagent, which turns a certain color according to air quality.

Around the reagent is something that resembles a color wheel that measures air quality in parts per billion.

The color of the reagent spot can be checked with the color wheel around it to give an air-quality reading.

Each card has two different reagent spots and two different color wheels. One is for a one-hour air check. The other is for an eight-hour air check.

"You would wear it for one hour or eight hours, and then you pull the card out, and there would be a colored spot," Lambert said.

He said the badge detects a wide range of air quality concentrations.

"You can see very low concentrations on around to 350 parts per billion," he said. "Around 100 to 150 parts per billion is what they set as a limit for continuous breathing."

Lambert said there is still one small glitch in the badge they are working on.

"It turns color in ultraviolet light, which means you can't wear it outdoors," he said. "Inside it works fine."

Lambert made a switch from studying water quality to studying air quality.

"For many years, we were in water analysis, and some ideas came out about air analysis, and we did some work in that area," Lambert said.

Lambert said he has been working on this concept for about 10 years. He came up with a reagent that works well about three years ago.

He said working on the reagents was a trial-and-error method.

"It took two to three months and 34 different tries to find one that worked," he said.

Lambert said the badge can be useful if a person is working in a place that generates a lot of ozone, such as a copy center, and wonders if the air quality is dangerous.

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

Jack Lambert, professor emeritus of chemistry, holds a personal ozone detector that can be worn as a lapel pin.

"This will tell you," he said.

Lambert said he is working with an employee of a company named Vistanomics.

"The fellow in California is marketing these badges worldwide," Lambert said.

Lambert said they are still working on badges that are more complicated.

"For a first approximation, these work real nicely for industry, schools and places like that," he said. The fact that there are two different reagents on one badge is a selling point."

Lambert said low cost and simplicity are two things the badge has going for it.

Lambert said the badge costs pennies to make, but the other systems that check air quality can cost $10,000 to $25,000.

Founder of Earth Day to speak of changes

JASON TYLER

Nelson still active in environmental-protection issues

In recognition of the 25th anniversary of Earth Day, the day's founder, Gaylord Nelson, will speak at 7 p.m. today in Union Forum Hall.

Nelson, a former state senator, governor of Wisconsin and U.S. senator, has dedicated his life to the issues of environmental preservation, wildlife protection and resource recycling.

Nelson will lecture about past and present issues that affect the ever-changing environments of Earth.

"The historical roots of Earth Day, the current laws that protect the environment and how those laws are under attack will be discussed during the lecture," said Patrick Carney, Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee chairperson.

Carney said more people should take an active role in protecting the environment.

The UPC looks forward to a lot of participation from the student body, he said.

"We would like to see a lot of people attend the event because Mr. Nelson was a founder of Earth Day and is still enormously involved in protecting the environment," Carney said.

Since Earth Day started in 1970, more people have become environmentally aware and paid more attention to how their actions affect the environment.

"As the person that started Earth Day, I think it is very good for the campus community at K-State to hear a retrospective of what we have accomplished in protecting the environment," said Robert Wilson, president of KSU Students for Sustainability.

The lecture is being co-sponsored by KSU Students for Sustainability, the Northern Audubon Society, Kansas Environmental Seminar and KSU Environmental Professionals.

Rally gives bicyclists chance to address issues

In honor of Earth Day, bicyclists can stress the energy-and environment-saving attributes of bicycles.

Attention, bicyclists:

Do you want to address those issues that affect where you ride and park?

Do you want to point out the need for more attention to be paid to the environmental benefits from bicycling?

Do you want a chance to do both those things and ride your bike, too?

From 10 a.m. to noon on Saturday, a bike rally will allow K-State students to emphasize the importance of pedal power on campus.This rally will allow bicyclists to promote the use of bikes as alternative transportation.

In honor of Earth Day, bicyclists can stress the energy- and environment-saving attributes of bicycles.

At the same time, it will allow bicyclists to emphasize the need for more bike paths. More paths could help protect the safety of pedestrians, as well as allowing bicyclists to get closer to their classes.

Bicyclists can also voice the need for more bike racks to allow K-State bicyclists to park closer to their classes.

If we can improve biking conditions on campus, then maybe more students will ride their bikes.

If the rally can raise enough awareness, maybe a few more K-State students will save their gas and get more exercise by pedaling.

What we're saying is, this bike rally is a good thing. So take your bike, ride around, express your opinion and have a fun time.

BUSTER

It's not whether you win or lose — it's whether or not they'll let you play

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

It was summertime and I was 10, the star quarterback of the neighborhood football team.

I could spit farther, throw harder and tackle just as well as anyone. I was also the only female member.

We'd been playing all morning and the other team had requested a break. While it would have been neater to see someone pass out from heat exhaustion, we were ahead by a million points anyway, and feeling generous, we agreed to reconvene in the cool of the evening.

They went home, but my team plopped down to rest on the playing field, wiggling on the ground worn bare of its grass by our running that afternoon, and swatting at mosquitoes as they swarmed in for the feast.

We talked about what we were going to be when we grew up: cowboys, race car drivers, firemen and doctors.

I'd given a lot of thought to my future occupation, but hadn't shared my secret dreams with the others.

I wanted to be a railroad engineer like my father. The idea of going a hundred miles an hour in a vehicle that weighed ten tons appealed to me.

When I told the guys what I wanted, they laughed. I couldn't do it, they said, because I was a girl. I was required by law to be a ballet dancer or a mommy.

It was my first taste of sexism, and I didn't care for it.

I pointed out if I were a good enough quarterback, I could be a train driver if I wanted to. Girl or not.

The logic didn't help me. Later, when the game continued, I found myself replaced as star thrower.

Suddenly, I couldn't to do all the things I'd always done before well enough to play.

The lines had been clearly drawn, and I was on the other side.

My team won that day and many days afterwards, but the chance to play quarterback never came again.

When I listen to the arguments against affirmative action, I think about being barred from the football field that afternoon.

I remember the pride and anger I felt in the pit of my stomach that kept me from getting an adult insist that I be allowed to play.

Affirmative action has blown a whistle to make all the contestants on the field look up to see the star players they won't let play for whatever reason.

I hear affirmative action called a race-counting game, a way for the government to bully businesses into hiring people who may not be qualified.

I hear it places a burden upon minorities and women, forcing them to work against doubts regarding the strength of their abilities.

Still others say it doesn't go far enough, placing the bite on large businesses while still allowing smaller fish to continue sexist and racist hiring practices.

As for myself, I see it as a way to make the boys play fair.

Affirmative action has done a lot for countless women and minorities over the years, but it didn't hand them jobs.

It didn't throw open the doors of boardrooms and executive offices.

And while it hasn't solved the problems it set out to with its inception 30 years ago, the idea of being without it scares me.

Affirmative action has blown a whistle to make all the contestants on the field look up to see the star players they won't let play for whatever reason.

It makes them acknowledge us and our right to participate.

It needs to be revamped to fulfill that function again.

I didn't go get an adult to insist I be allowed to play in the game that day.

I almost wish I had. I would have worked twice as hard to prove myself half as good as any of the boys on the team, and I would have succeeded.

Erin Mansur-Smith is a senior in pre-law, English and theater.

Phone call wasn't welcome

"The only good thing I can say about this is that I'm glad I wasn't home to answer the call and be put on the spot like that."

MARIBEL SWEET

Dear editor,

Let me first begin by saying that I am no fan of political campaigning, at any level. I think it is overrated and totally out of control. I understand the need for those running for office to let us as voters know about the issues they are concerned with, but I believe this could be done in a less "circus-like" manner. I view voting as a personal matter, the same way I view my religion and my right to make choices and decisions — it's nobody else's business.

Now for the real reason for this letter ... the day before elections began, I arrived home to find a lengthy message on my answering machine from someone representing Liz Ring and her candidacy. I personally found this tactic intrusive and very rude. The only good thing I can say about this is that I'm glad I wasn't home to answer the call and be put on the spot like I'm sure many other unsuspecting students (who happened to be home at the time of the call) were.

▶ ELECTIONS

Senate needed more coverage

Dear editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Collegian on the excellent job it did covering the student government elections.

With the coverage of the forums, candidate announcements and the five-part series in which the presidential and vice presidential candidates could outline their ideas, I don't think any student can complain that they couldn't get enough information on the candidates.

However, I do feel that there was a disservice done to a former candidate for senate in the College of Agriculture. Former candidate, Scott Smith, withdrew from the race on April 6. Yet his resignation was never announced in the Collegian or even acknowledged (he was still included in the Voter's Guide).

Considering the Collegian is one of the most important ways that students can get information about Kansas State University, I think a disservice was done to the members of the College of Agriculture. Unless they had personal contact with this candidate, they were unaware of his reasons for withdrawal.

For the most part, the Collegian should be commended for the hard work and effort that was put forth in an effort to inform the students.

However, I believe that the main problem was the heavy focus on the presidential election. I do not wish to downplay the importance of the presidential elections, but I do think that the senate candidates deserved at least a mention once in a while.

▶ SAFETY

Vans need control on campus

Dear editor,

What is the legal speed limit for those white K-State vans on our campus sidewalks? Is it possible there is a special permit available for parking privileges to the entrance of Farrell Library, on campus sidewalks or handicap ramps?

Students, I challenge you to stop, watch these vans, and then deny the facts. On Feb. 24, I sat on the steps of Holton Hall for a period of 10 minutes. During that time, I saw at least four vans cruising our sidewalks, forcing students to yield the right of way.

"These vans deliver mail just like UPS and Federal Express — you know, those other vans that don't park on the sidewalks for extended periods of time."

BOB KOHL
junior in business and Spanish

At the same time in front of Eisenhower Hall, parked on the handicap ramp, was another white K-State vehicle.

By chance, I presumed it was rush hour on the sidewalks, but then on Monday morning, I saw another K-State van. Fortunately, I am trained in first aid in case of emergencies because a bicyclist was nearly run over, and three students were forced onto the grass by van #7106. How long will we allow this to continue? Does someone need to be run over first?

In reality, would you as a pedestrian feel safe walking on the streets of Manhattan, believing that you had the right of way in every circumstance? Don't you feel cheated not being allowed to drive or park on the sidewalks? Since it is not posted, who has the legal right of way, anyway?

So what are the solutions? I suppose I could be as bold as to ask that the vans remain on the roadways, but obviously that would be ridiculous. These vans deliver mail just like UPS and Federal Express — you know, those other vans that don't park on the sidewalks for extended periods of time. Could these vans have some common courtesy — not driving on the sidewalks during class changes, allowing the students the right of way, and not parking on handicap ramps? Maybe, just maybe, these campus vans could also use those service parking spaces that are conveniently located in the best spots on campus.

So if these solutions seem unreasonable, could I at least find out how to purchase a permit to drive on the sidewalks too?

▶ LAFENE

SHAC open to your concerns

Dear editor,

This is an open letter to all K-State students from the Student Health Advisory Committee regarding the imposition of operating Lafene Health Center on a user fee-only basis. SHAC is a committee of Student Governing Association. The 12 student members are appointed by the student body president, and the two faculty members are selected by Faculty Senate.

As it operates currently, Lafene is able to provide services to students due to a minimal student-health fee. This is a cost-effective method to give every student quality health care for a minimal charge. In comparison, one or two visits to the Manhattan Medical Clinic would almost cost the same as the student would pay for unlimited office visits to Lafene.

"In comparison, one or two visits to the Manhattan Medical Clinic would almost cost the same as the student would pay for unlimited office visits to Lafene."

Student Health Advisory Committee members

All student health care is set up with a capitated fee, meaning a payment up front to receive care as needed. Most university health-care centers are conducted and operated in the same manner.

This process is the way of the future for all health-care providers, community and university. Lafene would not be able to survive if it operated solely on user fees. It would not be beneficial to the students at K-State to take a step backward.

Secondly, Lafene provides many additional services at no charge. If the user fee was installed, the Health Education and Promotion Services and nutrition counseling services would have to be eliminated or greatly curtailed, as it would be very difficult to provide these community services on a user-fee basis. Many insurance companies do not cover these costs; therefore, a student needing these services would most likely have to pay for these services out of his or her own pocket.

The main focus of these services is prevention — it is easier and more cost-effective to prevent rather than treat a problem. If these services were eliminated, it would have a long-term effect on the prevention and hopefully elimination of many nutrition disorders and sexually transmitted diseases.

Likewise, as University Counseling Services also receives a portion of the student health fees, these services would also suffer as a result of a user-only-pays philosophy.

In summary, we want to encourage every student to look at the big picture. The costs of Lafene are spread out over every student to make the center more cost effective for everyone. It is widely accessible to all students, and the charges are minimal compared to community health care. Lafene is committed to providing quality health care and services to all K-State students. Lafene is here to serve you.

Take advantage of the convenient health care located at the heart of the K-State campus.

Take teacher evaluations seriously

Dear editor,

It's almost the end of the semester, temperatures in the classroom are soaring to unbearable levels and every student is in dire need of some extra-credit points. All of a sudden, the teacher walks into class and announces that extra credit will be given for filling out an evaluation form.

I don't think that students realize the significance of teacher evaluations and what effects they have for future students enrolling in the course.

This is the only time that administrators ask for students opinions concerning professors teaching abilities and demeanor within the classroom. I urge all students to take the time to fill out the evaluations in a manner that will be taken seriously by those who will be reviewing the evaluations. Furthermore, if you do not believe that your concern can be addressed by filling out the evaluation, ask your advisor about it.

You can do all of these things this week in preparation for Outdoor Awareness Day on Saturday.

The Outdoor Recreation Committee and Amnesty International are working with local businesses and campus clubs to educate students and the community on environmental issues.

"Throughout the week, you can recycle your catalogs, magazines and phone books at the Union under the stairs by Union Station," said Emily Brink, junior in kinesiology and pre-physical therapy. Brink is a member of the Outdoor Recreation Committee and is in charge of the events.

Several businesses and clubs will be set up in the K-State Union Plaza to talk with students. Pathfinder, Amnesty International, Students for Sustainability and the Rock Climbing Club are some of the sponsors that will be participating, Brink said.

"It will be a good chance for clubs and businesses to showcase what they know," Brink said.

There will be a free concert for students Friday evening. The concert will start at 7:45 p.m. in the Union free-speech zone, which is the area north of the Union in front of Seaton Hall.

Bea Kendrick, Jan Allen, Twang and Plink Inc., and Susan Drake will be some of the performers, Brink said. There will also be giveaways at the concert. The concert should last until 11:45 p.m., she said.

There will be a bike rally starting at 10 a.m. Saturday at the free-speech zone. The bicyclists will take a 6-mile ride through campus and Manhattan.

"We want to promote bicycling as an alternative form of transportation and to promote making new bike lanes and making the old ones safer," Brink said.

Mark Taussig, University landscape architect, will be there to ask students their opinions about the bicycle routes on campus.

"We want to get the students' ideas and suggestions on where they would like the routes located," Taussig said.

He said he wants to know if students think they need more bike racks and where they should be placed.

"The information will be used for a long-range plan for better access and parking," Taussig said.

The bicyclists will have a police escort, and several Manhattan intersections will be blocked off, Brink said. There will be coupons handed out from local businesses and drinks provided, she said.

At 1 p.m. Saturday, people can meet at the free-speech zone before going to clean area parks.

"We plan on cleaning Linear Park and the area up on the Top of the World. We will pick up trash around the area. Manhattan Parks and Recreation will provide the trash bags and pick them up when we're done," Brink said.

Jeff Penrose, Outdoor Recreation Committee chairperson, said this is a great opportunity for students.

"Our goal is to have students get out and enjoy the outdoors," he said.

"We really want students to have a good time."

Colleges illegally dispose radioactive material

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Radioactive material is tossed into the trash and buried in a landfill. Eight people are unknowingly exposed when radioactive waste leaks from a container because someone forgot to put the plug in. Labs with radioactive materials are left unlocked and unsupervised.

These incidents, and similar ones, occurred not at an irresponsible corporation or in a bad B-movie plot, but at Harvard, Boston University, the University of Massachusetts and other schools.

Nuclear Regulatory Commission documents obtained by the Associated Press under the Freedom of Information Act show that Massachusetts universities have what a Nuclear Regulatory Commission inspector called a "cavalier" attitude toward the handling and disposal of radioactive material.

The inspector singled out one school in particular: Harvard, which was cited at least eight times in the last 10 years for violating NRC regulations.

The documents showed that radioactive material has been illegally thrown into the trash at least seven times by four different Massachusetts institutions in the last eight years. Authorities suspect it now sits buried in municipal landfills — though they don't know where.

Four of these instances occurred at the Boston University medical school, where a radiology instrument containing radioactive material was accidently thrown into the a trash compactor in December 1987 and hauled to a landfill south of Boston.

On March 13, 1989, radioactive material was discovered missing from a BU lab. Six months later, a vial containing radioactive phosphorous was left in a hallway trash pile and disposed of in an unknown landfill. And on Oct. 4, 1993, a housekeeping employee threw another container of radioactive phosphorus into the trash.

BU's associate director of environmental health, James Bove, called the problems isolated incidents, and said procedures have been changed.

Robert Hallisey, director of the state's Radiation Control Program, called college students and professors "lackadaisical" about the issue.

"People are in deep denial about the potential hazard to themselves and the potential harm that they are doing to completely unknowing people," said Mary Olson, who was accidentally exposed to radiation when she was a Yale University researcher.

NRC documents show that in addition to inadequately disposing of radioactive waste, the universities violated safe handling rules and had several accidents.

At Harvard, NRC officials found the doors to labs and storage rooms propped open and researchers working with radiation while wearing shorts, without required lab coats or monitoring badges.

Students and professors at Boston College, Brandeis, Harvard and UMass-Amherst were discovered eating sandwiches and drinking coffee in labs where radioactive isotopes were present. Eating in a lab where there is radioactive material is illegal, since radiation can be rapidly absorbed into the body this way. Yet Brandeis lab workers kept a coffee pot on a lab bench where radioactive phosphorus was being used.

Robin Bell, the Brandeis radiation safety officer, said eating in a lab was an example of plain and simple carelessness. Still, he added, "It's a problem you'll find virtually everywhere that radiation is used in universities."

There also have been accidents involving radioactive material in colleges and universities:

- Eight people stepped in radioactive liquid at Harvard Medical School on Jan. 13, 1993, after someone forgot to put a plug in a container filled with radioactive waste. By the time the leak was detected, radioactivity had spread to all six floors and the building had to be evacuated.
- At UMass-Amherst last year, a visiting researcher spilled radioactive liquid in a lab. It was discovered five days later, after two university employees unwittingly stepped in the material and tracked it around.

Injury could keep Smith out of draft

SCOTT REYNOLDS
Collegian

This is the second in a four-part series on potential NFL draft picks from the K-State Wildcats.

Former K-State running back J.J. Smith is a hurting man.

An injury to his hip and groin area has made the K-State career rushing leader's life painful in more ways than one.

With the NFL draft only days away, Smith ran a plodding 4.61 in a recent workout for NFL scouts.

Talk about bad timing.

Smith's injury occurred last December in a practice before the Aloha Bowl. The injury forced former running back Leon Edwards to start in the bowl game and limited Smith's role and playing time.

Smith

"It hurt so bad that I had trouble walking, much less running," Smith said. "The doctor said I've pulled some nerves in my lower abdomen."

The injury is healing, but Smith's doctors say it will take several months.

The best cure for his nagging injuries is rest and inactivity, but with the high number of talented running backs coming out in the draft this year, Smith can't afford to sit around.

"I've told the scouts about my injury, but I don't think they factor that," Smith said. "All they see is my slow 40 time, and everyone knows I can do better than that."

In fact, Smith's fastest time in the 40-yard dash is 4.38. His speed and elusiveness allowed him to accumulate 1,644 all-purpose yards his senior season, which ranked him 11th in the country.

Smith's all-purpose ability is what an AFC scout finds most attractive.

"If he was a running back without his kick-return ability he'd have a hard time," said one AFC scout, referring to Smith's 26.9-yard kick-return average.

"His open-field running and his hands make him a good third-down back, but with some average workouts recently, he's fallen into the sixth- to seventh-round range."

That also pains Smith.

Before the 1994 season, he was listed as one of the top 15 running backs in the nation by the NFL Draft Report and Lindy's Pro Football Annual. Now he is the NFL's forgotten man.

"It hurts a lot to read those draft magazines and not see your name up there with the other running backs," Smith said.

"But I'm on a mission now. I've got that grit to prove to everybody that I can play in the NFL."

After competing in her home country of Canada, Wanita Dykstra found a change of scenery refreshing

JILL TEGTMEIER
Collegian

K-State freshman high jumper Wanita Dykstra chose to be the No. 2 high jumper at K-State this year after being the No. 1 college high jumper in Canada last year.

So why did she want to make the move to Manhattan?

"I came here so I wouldn't be No. 1. I just didn't want the pressure," she said.

"I love it here," she said.

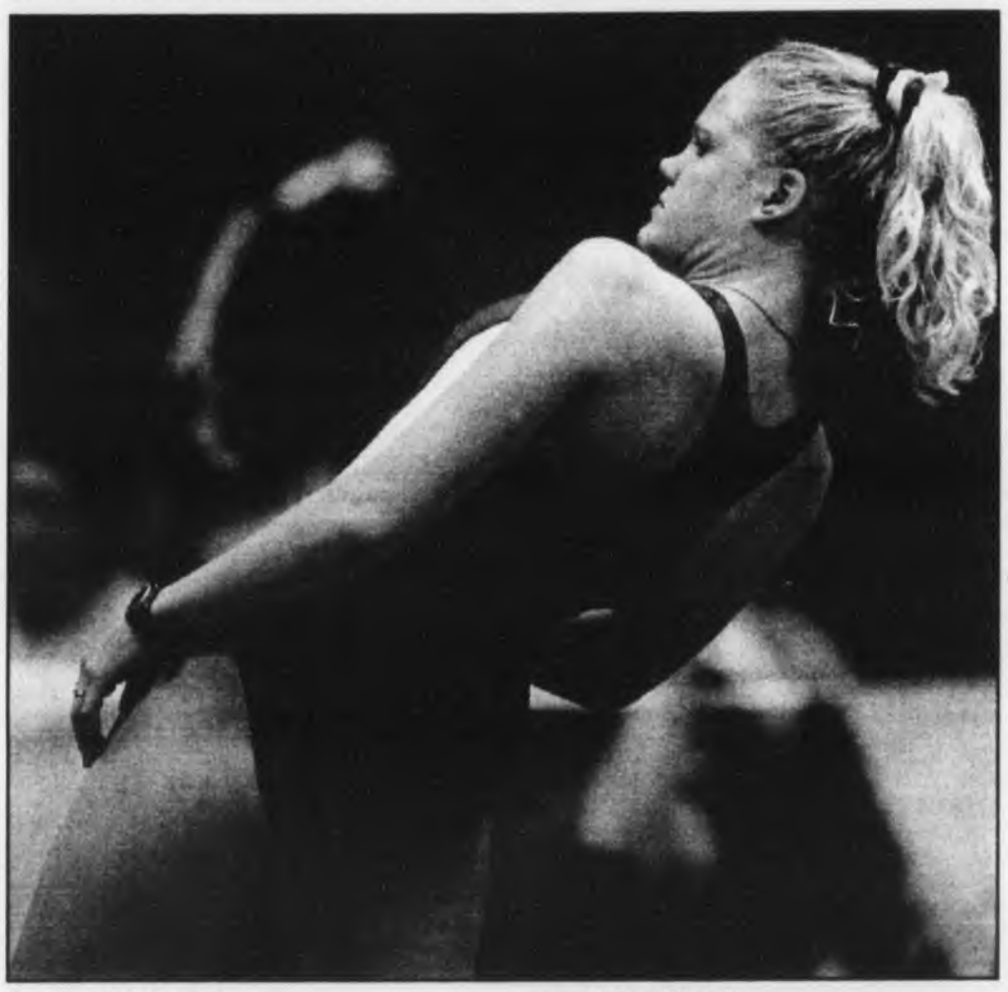
Dykstra did not begin competitively high jumping until 10th grade in her hometown of St. Catharines, Ontario. She cleared 5 feet, 10-3/4 inches that year.

"I've liked high jumping since I started it. The more I did it, the more I liked it," she said.

As an 11th-grade student, Dykstra qualified for the World Juniors Championship in Korea. By the end of the next year, she cleared 6'3-1/2" inches and was on her way to college at the University of Toronto.

"I jumped so terrible while I was there. I wasn't the same person as I am this year. It just wasn't working. The workouts didn't suit me. I didn't even clear six feet," Dykstra said.

But she said things are good now. Dykstra said Coach Rovelto is good at keeping the workouts fresh.



"I never go to practice saying 'This is going to be the same as last week.' It's always a little different. That helps keep me motivated, so I don't get bored," she said.

Dykstra said Rovelto and the other high jumpers have taught her a lot about high jumping. She gives a lot of credit to friend and teammate Gwen Wentland.

"I train with Gwen, and we really push each other in the weight room. It's really hard to train when you're all alone. It's not a rivalry type of thing. We encourage one another," she said.

Dykstra said training in Canada is at a much lower level than in the United States, and the skills of the athletes are just not as highly developed. She said it is partly because of the lack of funding. There are no scholarships in Canada, she said.

"I'm so lucky to be here and to be on scholarship. That's something I can't take for granted," she said.

Wanita Dykstra prepares for a high jump attempt. Dykstra, who is from St. Catharines, Ontario,Canada said she has changed her high-jump technique from a standing start, which her teammates teased her about, to her current rocking technique.

FILE PHOTO BY DARREN WHITLEY
Collegian

Dykstra, who is majoring in kinesiology, said she hopes to attend graduate school at K-State while she is still on scholarship.

"Although I hate to admit it, I really like school. I like it a lot. It's hard to imagine doing anything else. But when I graduate, I want to be able to get a job doing something I enjoy," she said.

Dykstra said she hopes she can keep jumping for a long time but knows it won't last forever.

"I can't do it when I am 50 years old; well, at least not as high as I am now," she said, laughing.

Dykstra, who is the youngest of six children, said it's sometimes hard to be so far away from her family.

Dykstra said she is the first person in her family to go to college away from home. She describes her family as being very close.

"When I first came here, I wasn't homesick because I was needing to get away. I needed to be somewhere, so I couldn't come home every time something went wrong," she said.

"They're always concerned about how I am doing at school and in track," she said.

Despite enjoying her experiences at K-State, she said she misses her family sometimes.

"Yeah, I miss them now, especially my nieces and nephews," she said. "Jeepers, I hope they miss me too. I guess something would be wrong if they didn't."

Dykstra said her mindset plays a big part in how well she jumps.

"I have to learn to think that I can do whatever I want to. Right now, I really want to make the all-American Top Five," she said.

She said the 1996 Olympics are a big goal for her.

"I really want to go to the Olympics. I have to make the standard, which is 6 feet, 3-1/2 inches, either this year or next year and then qualify at the trials to compete for the Canadians," she said.

Dykstra said she knows she will have a better chance to make it to the Olympics if she represents Canada because there is more competition in the United States.

"It's also my home country. I don't want to just walk away and forget where I came from," she said.

Dykstra said she was very fortunate to have an American coach at the University of Toronto who taught her some rules she still lives by.

"He said winning is nice, but it is not the No. 1 thing. He taught her to be humble and have respect for what she do," she said.

"He made me believe that what I have is a God-given talent and that I should use it," she said.

"If I win an Olympic medal someday, then I can say I'm good — until then I'll say, 'I'll just keep trying.'"

"I'm so lucky to be here and to be on scholarship. That's something I can't take for granted."

Netters close regular season with close loss to Huskers

FILE PHOTO BY TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

K-State netter Martine Shrubsole attempts to rip a backhand shot during doubles action against the University of Kansas on Wednesday at Ahearn Field House. K-State lost to Nebraska Tuesday (5-4). The Cats return to action Friday at the Big Eight Tennis Tournament in Oklahoma City.

BRIAN THOMAS
Collegian

The K-State tennis team finished regular-season play on a down note Monday.

After a convincing 7-2 victory over Iowa State Sunday, the Wildcats dropped a heartbreaker in Lincoln, Neb., as the Nebraska Cornhuskers slipped past the Cats 5-4 in Big Eight Conference action. With the loss, K-State enters the post season tournament with an overall mark of 8-11, 2-5 in conference play.

The Wildcats struggled a bit in singles, capturing only two out of the six matches.

In No. 1 singles, Karina Kuregian, the No. 13-ranked singles player in the country, posted a 6-1, 7-6 (7-0) straight-sets victory against Nebraska's Annie Yang.

Kuregian improved her singles record to 26-6, including 6-1 in Big Eight action.

Nikki Lagerstrom also claimed a 6-3, 7-6 (7-2) No. 5-singles win over Jane Startin.

To pull off the conference victory, the Cats would need to sweep the doubles matches.

K-State's No. 14-ranked doubles team of Kuregian and Martine Shrubsole had troubles in its opening set but eventually cruised to a 7-6 (8-6), 6-2 win against Yang and Lisa Hart. Karen Nicholson and Dinah Watson pulled out a 6-2, 4-6, 6-1 win in No. 2 doubles to even the day's match play.

In the final match of the day, Lagerstrom and Chris Schulte dropped a tough three-set tiebreaker to Michelle Waldhauser and Jennifer Thoste 7-5, 4-6, 7-6 (8-6).

Wildcat tennis coach Steve Bietau said the Nebraska match was a tough loss for his team.

"We got beat because we played poorly in three of the singles matches," Bietau said. "Nikki Lagerstrom played her best match of the year, and the doubles matches were all good, competitive matches. We just can't put ourselves in that position, being down 2-4 coming out of the singles matches."

Next up for K-State is a trip to Oklahoma City for the Big Eight Tournament. The Wildcats finished the conference season in a three-way tie for fifth place. A tiebreaker will determine the Cats' opponent for first-round action, which is scheduled for Friday.

Camp should teach professionals players respect for baseball

What has happened to all the great American free agents?

Wait, I know — many of them are in the Camp for Lost Souls" down in Homestead, Fla.

What a pity. All those poor, underpaid ball players standing around waiting to be picked up out of the gutter and brought back to life in the big leagues.

MIKE BUNCH

For the first time in history, the baseball players' union sponsored a camp for free agents who were left without work after the strike ended.

Is this like the summer camp you see in the movies, a home away from home for all those rich, spoiled children?

What good is this camp? I don't know, maybe these "professionals"/children will finally learn a valuable lesson: Greed doesn't pay.

Among the 53 "professionals" who attended the camp were Chris Sabo, Dave Stewart, Todd Stottlemeyer and several other stars in the game.

All of the players in this camp can expect a serious pay cut, possibly up to 70 percent.

Of the players in camp, 21 have already signed with teams while the rest wait their chance to get back into the game.

Jackie Moore, a former Oakland manager, is leading these guys through camp, practicing every day to keep players in shape and their skills sharp.

Moore said they wanted to get players off the lot and cut a deal.

"How many camps can you go into where you can look at a player and take him home with you?" he asked.

So?

These guys hurt themselves and no one else when they decided to strike.

I think they would be better off if the union used this camp as a job-training center. Make them all work for a change.

Let them learn how to flip burgers, mow lawns or do something useful with their time.

Maybe they could go into the World Wrestling Federation like Lawrence Taylor or end up in Hollywood making cameo appearances.

If they wanted to play the game, keep their skills sharp and make the big money, they shouldn't have left the game.

Wait a minute. ....The more I think about it, the more I like the idea of a camp for "professionals." As a matter of fact, I think all of them should take a serious pay cut and spend time in the "Camp for Lost Souls."

Let's stop and think about this situation for a moment.

If I were to walk out of my job and then come back, could I honestly expect to make my original salary or regain the trust of my coworkers and the people I worked with?

No.

I couldn't respect myself, nor could I expect anyone else to take me back the way I was.

I think all the "professionals" shouldn't expect anything from anyone.

The "Camp for Lost Souls" is a good idea. We should let all the ballplayers sit there until they have earned the respect of the public and each other.

Maybe they could do a comedy routine and film the entire camp.

These poor players who need the money could become the next stars of slapstick, sort of like the "Police Academy" genre.

What about some classic skits?

I know, how about a pie in the face of Barry Bonds, a nose tweak and a couple of Nyuk, Nyuks for Bobby Bonilla and a good routine of "Who's on First" for David Cone?

What could we call this production? Let's see, "Camp Nowhere" is taken."Meatballs" is too. "Major League" is definitely out of the question, so how about "Brother, Can You Spare $1.5 Million?"

We could get Gilbert Gottfried of USA's "Up All Night" fame to direct and narrate the production.

As an added attraction, Rhonda Shearer of the same program could play Morgana the Kissing Bandit. It would add depth to the plot, don't you think?

I couldn't guarantee the success of the film, but I'm sure some people would pay to see it.

After all, some people out there paid to see "Ishtar," didn't they?

I think a pay cut and a little public ridicule would do the "professionals" a world of good. After all, they have made a mockery of the game. Why can't we make a mockery of them?

Baseball should be entertainment.

The"professionals" should understand and try to give people a game to enjoy and be proud of.

If not, make them work in the world of B-movie hell for a while.

If we pay to see them, we should get entertainment one way or the other.

Professor gains lessons in Uruguay

JOE KLEIDOSTY
Collegian

A professional interest in languages and in cross-cultural psychology inspired Richard Harris to teach psychology at the Catholic University of Uruguay in Montevideo.

Harris, professor of psychology, discussed his experiences during a presentation Monday night in Bluemont Hall titled, "Lessons from Uruguay: What can a psychologist gain from working in another culture?"

He was in Uruguay from August to November 1994.

Harris' trip was primarily funded by a Fulbright grant, which is awarded to several hundred scholars each year to give them an opportunity to participate in an international exchange program.

Harris said he applied for the Fulbright grant one year in advance.

"I was interested in Latin America, and there was an opening in Uruguay that exactly fit my expertise," Harris said.

It was a chance to get some cross-cultural experience and contribute something," he said.

"It also seemed like a good place to go."

Harris began his presentation by trying to dispel some of the misconceptions about Uruguay.

He said Uruguay is not fast-growing and crowded.

"Our 5-year-old commented, 'This looks just like Kansas,'" Harris said.

Harris also said Uruguay is not a cheap, bargain hunters' paradise.

"M&M's are $6 a bag or so," Harris said.

He said Uruguay also has little crime and the people are not lazy.

Harris then showed a slide presentation to show the audience what the country looked like.

Harris' family traveled with him to Uruguay, and he said he didn't know what to expect from his three young children during the trip.

"It was a 20-hour trip from Kansas City to Montevideo," he said.

Harris taught research design, cognitive psychology and psychology of mass communications at the university.

Harris said he has someone collecting data for him for a future research project.

"I hopefully started a connection where someone will be collaborating with me on my research," Harris said.

Brian Buford, junior in psychology, said he attended the colloquium because he was interested in Harris' experiences.

"It made me want to get some cross-cultural experience, as well," Buford said.

▶YOU WORK 3 HOURS A DAY JUST TO PAY TAXES

TOPEKA (AP) — Kansans will have to work three more weeks before they will have all of their state and local taxes paid off for the year, a report released Monday showed.

According to the report by the Tax Foundation in Washington, 18 states have higher taxes than Kansas.

The foundation ranks each state every year according to the taxes it imposes on its residents. It also figures the number of days it takes a year for average citizens to earn all the state and local taxes they must pay.

The wages an average Kansan earned before May 4 go toward state and local taxes, which is the same date as last year. That day is declared Kansas Tax Freedom Day by the foundation and the Kansas Taxpayers Network.

While the average Kansan spends about 53 minutes of each day earning money to pay state and local taxes, it takes about 1 hour and 50 minutes of each day to earn enough money to pay federal taxes. Connecticut, with a new state income tax, had the highest taxes in the nation.

General Motors' coupon offer not accepted

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — A settlement under which owners of allegedly fire-prone General Motors Corp. pickups would have gotten $1,000 coupons toward new GM trucks was thrown out Monday by an appeals court that branded it a marketing program.

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals also said the coupon would be worthless to rental companies and "less wealthy" truck owners unable to purchase new GM trucks.

The case involved the sidesaddle fuel tanks GM put on trucks built from 1973 to 1987. Last fall, Transportation Secretary Federico Pena said the trucks were prone to catch fire in a crash, and he blamed the design for 150 deaths.

In December, GM averted a recall by reaching an agreement with the government to spend about $51 million on safety and research programs. Some industry analysts estimated a recall would have cost GM $1 billion.

The plaintiffs in the Philadelphia settlement argued that the truck design and lawsuits over fiery accidents had reduced the value of their vehicles.

The settlement combined 36 class-action lawsuits filed in all states but Texas, where a judge approved a separate settlement affecting 650,000 truck owners. That settlement is being appealed.

In rejecting the settlement, the 3rd Circuit said because of a failure to take all factors into consideration, the federal judge who approved the settlement overestimated its cost to GM, which was put at $1.9 billion to $2.8 billion at the time.

The judges agreed with opponents who branded the 1993 settlement merely a marketing program.

When the settlement was reached, GM estimated 5 million to 6 million trucks remained on the road.

"We're delighted that the court threw out a bad decision that rewarded lawyers and did nothing for consumers," said Clarence Ditlow, executive director of the Center for Auto Safety, which contested the settlement.

"When they started marketing these trucks in 1973, GM ads said 60 percent of them would still be on the road 18 years later. They made the trucks rugged, but they made the gas tanks like balloons waiting to be punctured."

Ed Lechtzin, a GM spokesman in Detroit, said he was still reviewing the ruling.

Inmates riot against hair rule

Prisoners riot, stab guards in protest of guidelines

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Prisoners upset about a new policy requiring inmates to cut their hair stabbed five guards and took three hostages Monday in an uprising that ended after five inmates won permission to meet with the media.

The five prisoners, three of whom wore long dreadlocks, walked out of the cafeteria where they were holed up for 11 hours, lay on their stomachs and were arrested.

The shackled inmates then met for five minutes with Associated Press reporter Robert Tanner and two photographers to complain about the new hair guidelines and other proposed restrictions.

The inmates agreed to give up after being assured by negotiators they would not be shot by the guards when they surrendered.

Before their surrender, the prisoners released the last two of three hostages seized earlier in the day at the Broad River Correctional Institution. The hostages, a man and a woman, appeared shaken but unharmed.

Five guards were stabbed during the uprising, and four were in serious condition with head, chest or back wounds, said state Corrections Department spokeswoman Robyn Zimmerman. One was not seriously hurt.

The five prisoners who met with the media denied being involved in any of the stabbings.

The five were unarmed when they emerged from the cafeteria, but Jim Harvey, a regional prison administrator who conducted the negotiations, said they had been armed with knives.

Some of the five inmates said they were either Muslim or Rastafarian and were opposed on religious grounds to a new prison rule requiring inmates to cut their hair.

Under rules that take effect Wednesday, inmates can wear their hair no longer than the collar and must be clean-shaven except for small mustaches.

"It is inhumane to deface a person," said a dreadlocked Willie Gary, a 46-year-old prisoner who is serving 20 years for armed robbery.

The standoff ended at 7:15 p.m., about an hour and 15 minutes after the five inmates said they would give up if they had the chance to air their grievances. Tanner and photographers from The (Columbia) State and Greenville television station WYFF were taken inside.

The uprising at the medium- and maximum-security prison began around 8:30 a.m. with a fight in the cafeteria, Ms. Zimmerman said.

It spread with sporadic fights and small fires breaking out elsewhere in the prison, but the flames were extinguished by 10 a.m. and most of the approximately 1,000 inmates were locked in their cells, she said.

During the fight, five inmates seized three hostages and barricaded themselves in the cafeteria kitchen.

Paula Brown, wife of one inmate, said inmates were upset about the new hair guidelines and a proposed rule that prisoners wear uniforms.

Judge cancels gag order on double-murder case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNCTION CITY (AP) — Attorneys for an 18-year-old man charged with capital murder have withdrawn a request that information be restricted in the case, and a judge lifted a gag order.

The motion was withdrawn Monday before Geary County District Judge Larry Bengtson could convene a hearing.

Defense attorney Maritza Segarra declined to say why the motion was withdrawn.

Christopher Everitt of Junction City is charged with capital murder in the deaths of Trudy Moore, 55, and her son, Oscar Moore Jr., 26. They were found shot to death March 21 in the Pizza Hut restaurant where they worked.

On March 28, Bengston ordered law-enforcement officials and court personnel not to speak about the case to the media when defense attorneys complained about massive, highly prejudicial publicity.

The defense attorneys had also sought to close all pre-trial hearings to the public and media, have all documents sealed until a jury is picked and bar cameras from the courtroom.

The request was challenged by Montgomery Publications Inc., which owns the Junction City Daily Union and television station KTMJ.

Keith Henry, attorney for Platinum Broadcasting, owner of KJCK, said he expected the defense to file a similar motion later.

Geary County attorney Chris Biggs said he and his staff would not discuss the case with the media anyway.

Everitt is being held on $1-million bond.

Film contest looks at hopefuls' footage

Future Hollywood professionals will have the opportunity to show off their work at the fourth annual Kan Film Festival June 2-3.

The festival, principally sponsored by the Kansas and Missouri Film Commissions, is designed to encourage aspiring filmmakers in the two-state area to submit their work for competition.

There is no entry fee for the competition, and all entries must be submitted on VHS videotape to the Kan Film Festival by May 5.

Vicky Henley, Director of Kansas Film Commission, said the festival is very competitive.

"All of the divisions will have good competition, but the college and high-school divisions are extremely competitive," she said.

The festival has six levels of competition, which include primary (grades 1-6), intermediate (grades 7-9), secondary (grades 10-12), college, professional and an open division.

The festival will be at Johnson County Community College, and more than $3,000 in cash prizes will be awarded.

Henley said the competition is intense, but everyone has fun.

"One of the fun things about the competition is there will be Hollywood professionals at the festival to help us judge the films," she said.

Jerry Jones, president of the Kan Film Festival, said he is hoping there will be more entries this year.

"I'm hopeful that this year we will have a record number of entries, and I think we need to see more entries from the collegiate level," he said.

Henley said the festival is growing by leaps and bounds.

"We had 50 more entries in 1994 than we had in 1993," she said. "We hope to top the 200 mark with entries this year."

Henley said this year's competition will include music videos.

"When we first started the festival, we wanted to include a music-video category but budgetarily couldn't afford it. However, it remains a popular form, and we have decided to include it in the '95 festival," she said.

Nice guy wants his love life out of toilet

Dear Cassie,

I'm at a loss. My love life is in the crapper. It's been awhile since I dated anyone, and I want to begin a relationship again.

I've been told by some of my women friends I'm one of the nicest, sweetest guys they know, and they can't believe I have trouble finding anyone. I'm starting to wonder if that may be part of my problem. I'm not sure women want someone who is that way.

Signed, About to Give Up

Dear About To,

Hardly. Most women are not such masochists that they want someone who is the opposite of sweet and nice.

It amazes me how many letters I get from both sexes about this very same subject. It seems like half the world is searching for the other half, and they all keep missing each other.

▶ POETRY READING

People from many majors share talents

STEPHANIE SWISHER
Collegian

An eclectic group of people gathered to participate in one of the world's oldest art forms.

The Union Program Council Arts Committee had its bi-monthly poetry reading, "Anything Goes Except Your Clothes," last night in the K-State Union Art Gallery.

The readings were conducted monthly, but this month the arts council decided to have two, said Scott Huggins, senior in English and Russian and poetry-reading coordinator.

"It's a great way for people who explore poetry to share their own works and get criticism from others," Huggins said.

"We're having old fun in a new way," he said. "It's one of the oldest arts, and it was one of the earliest ways in which people had fun and shared their poetry.

The poetry readings are casual and relaxed.

"People who are interested in reading may either sign up before the reading, or they can walk up after the other readers are finished," Huggins said.

The people who read their poetry come from different backgrounds and academic majors.

Neleigh Lindfors, freshman undecided, said she likes to participate in the poetry readings when she can.

"I usually write about anything that is on my mind at the time," Lindfors said. "It's a good way for me to discard the information in my mind."

For some people, poetry is a private expression of thoughts, but for some people, it is a way to sound out their feelings, Lindfors said.

One poet read his thoughts on the recent loss of a close friend to suicide.

"It's life and death, and we are life," he said.

For some people, it takes time to get used to reading their poetry in front of other people.

Karen Whitmore, junior in jewelry design and Arts Committee chair, read another poet's work.

"I haven't had guts enough to read my own work," Whitmore said. "I usually like to read my own favorites, and I go for the older-fashioned works like Shakespeare or Longfellow."

"I love to listen to other people's works, so that's why I read someone's tonight," Whitmore said.

Sharon Willits, UPC program adviser, said the poetry reading is an avenue for people to express poetry, whether it is original student work or some other author's.

Willits said the readings are usually in the art gallery because it has a good atmosphere.

In the past, the readings have been fairly popular and have had a good attendance, but Monday night's crowd of 12 people was a disappointment to some of the poets.

"This time of year is hard to get people to come to the readings because of their busy schedules," Manhattan resident Julie Radke said.

Nuclear plant needed to replace Chernobyl site

"We insist that Chernobyl's reactors can be stopped only after a compensating one is built."

SERGEI PARASHIN
Chernobyl nuclear power plant director

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIEV, Ukraine — Ukraine threatened Monday to keep the crippled Chernobyl nuclear station running unless Western countries agree quickly to build a replacement power plant.

"We insist that Chernobyl's reactors can be stopped only after a compensating one is built. And we are saying: 'Gentlemen, you have to pay for this,'" plant director Sergei Parashin said.

President Leonid Kuchma last week told a delegation from the European Union and the G-7 group of industrialized nations that the plant would be shut down by 2000.

The delegation was led by French Environment Minister Michel Barnier, who hailed Kuchma's announcement as a bold decision and a contract of confidence with the EU and the G-7.

Previously, Ukraine had demanded cash in exchange for closing Chernobyl. Now, officials say they'll take a nuclear, gas- or coal-fired plant instead.

"The mechanism is simple: As soon as one plant starts operating, one reactor at Chernobyl is closed. The second one starts operating, another one is closed and so on," said Vladimir Ryzhov, the president's economic adviser.

A gas plant would cost about $2 billion and take 40 months to build, Ukrainian officials say, and a nuclear plant would cost $4.5 billion and take eight or nine years.

G-7 officials promised last week to study construction proposals and said the World Bank might come up with some money.

"We must get a program for financing by July," Mikhail Umanets, the head of Ukraine's nuclear power agency, told reporters.

"Otherwise, Ukraine will regard the Western approach to the talks as not serious."

The two aging reactors at Chernobyl that still produce about 7 percent of Ukraine's energy. Two other reactors are shut down.

Reactor No. 4, which exploded in 1986 in the world's worst commercial nuclear accident, is encased in a leaky, steel-and-concrete sarcophagus. Reactor No. 2 has been closed since a fire in 1991.

In addition to grave economic difficulties, Ukraine has suffered chronic energy shortages and accumulated huge debts for natural gas deliveries from Russia since the 1991 Soviet collapse.

Father buries son; funeral home won't

Man with AIDS ostracized even after death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Greece — Funeral homes in Greece's second-largest city reportedly refused to bury a man with AIDS who died of a drug overdose. Instead, the burial was done by his family and a priest.

Kostas Ossas, 31, and his wife, Foteini, who also has AIDS, drew national attention when they decided to marry two years ago. Both had AIDS and were drug addicts at the time.

The newspaper Ta Nea reported Ossas was found dead Saturday. The paper reported funeral homes in the Salonica area, where the couple lived, refused to take the body to his home village about 75 miles to the east because Ossas had AIDS.

"The body was finally placed on the back of his father's pickup truck and driven to the village by the father," Ta Nea reported. Ossas was buried Sunday.

The daily and other newspapers reported that Ossas and his wife were ostracized after making their ailment known. Their isolation deepened following their decision to make their marriage public.

At the time, the couple, who had no children, said they wanted to use the marriage to show that people with AIDS could lead normal lives.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Administration wary of China may go along with the United States.

Despite differences with China over its detention of dissidents and limits on Red Cross access to them, U.S. relations with China have improved since President Clinton last May ceased conditioning the kind of tariffs imposed on exports to the United States to China's human rights record.

But on the projected deal with Iran, Qian refused to budge. "They weren't inclined to accept our explanation," another U.S. official said.

"We respect the view of the United States," Qian said. "But what we have done is consistent with international practice."

American intelligence estimates of Iran's capability of fabricating nuclear fuel from the two pressurized water reactors China intends to provide were turned over to Chinese nuclear experts last week, U.S. officials said.

The analyses were similar to reports turned over to Russia to try to stop a parallel Iranian project — the development with Russian help of a nuclear complex near the Persian Gulf.

Administration officials are skeptical that Iran's aim is to develop nuclear power for civilian purposes. Its agents have been trying to buy technology that does not match up with a civilian program, said a senior U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Christopher made no attempt to disguise his strong feelings about Iran and the danger of its acquiring technology that could have both civilian and military uses.

"We regard Iran as a state that is projecting terrorism throughout the Middle East and other parts of the world," he said. "We regard it as a country that is trying to undermine the peace process ... and trying to go forward with development of weapons of mass destruction.

"We feel no nation ought to go forward with nuclear cooperation with Iran. It is too dangerous to do so."

On the other hand Qian reaffirmed China's support for U.S. efforts to stop a North Korean's program that U.S. officials consider far more advanced than Iran's. A 5-megawatt reactor capable of turning out an estimated nuclear bomb's worth of plutonium a year has been frozen, but North Korea still refuses to accept South Korean light-water reactors as substitutes.

"Any steps by North Korea to break the freeze on its nuclear program would be regarded by the United States as a very serious matter," Christopher said.

It was the third meeting between Christopher and Qian in six months. They are due to meet again in Moscow in early May during the 50th anniversary celebration of the defeat of Germany in World War II.

Live theater show to incorporate virtual reality

Actors on stage have to react to what is being projected around them, Parr said.

"It is hard to see when you are up close to the screen," she said.

Mark Reaney, KU associate professor of theater and film, created the virtual-reality world using prototype software donated by the Virtus Corporation.

Ron Willis, KU professor of theater and film, is directing the show.

Reaney also designed the lighting, costumes, sound and hairstyles.

Neither the actors nor the audience wear gloves or helmets to navigate through the virtual world. Audience members do wear polarized glasses.

Over e-mail, Parr said some people have questioned whether the production would still be considered theater when it combines projected images.

But the show is entirely live, Parr said. Nothing is prerecorded.

"I think it is still theater. It is just a new form for people, and they are not used to it," she said. "No one knows what to expect, and that is good because no one knows what to compare it to."

Tickets for "The Adding Machine" can be purchased by phone at (913) 864-3982. The show will be performed on the Crafton-Preyer Theatre Stage in Murphy Hall at KU.

The play will be performed 8 p.m. today through Saturday and April 25-28 with matinees at 2:30 p.m. Saturday, Sunday and April 29 and 30. As of Monday, the show is sold out for Tuesday, Friday and Saturday (evening only) and April 27 and 28.

Tickets are $7 for non-KU students and $8 for the general public. Visa and MasterCard are accepted.

ed in," she said. "I don't want to do something I'd get bored in."

She said she and her husband had already done so much, even though she just turned 21.

"I've always admired young entrepreneurs," she said.

Coming up with the idea only a few months ago, she said that she's at a time in her life where she wants to try something else.

"I've already accomplished so much," Cunningham said. "It's time to try something new."

Cunningham started at K-State as an apparel and textile marketing major but decided having a business of ready-to-wear clothing would change too much.

"The bridal market doesn't change as much," she said.

Cunningham drove to Oklahoma to purchase her dress last year, and said she believed it would be more convenient to have a bridal boutique here in Manhattan.

Cunningham said her husband is very supportive of her endeavor.

"He's all for it," she said. "He's afraid he won't see me much, and he's willing to do anything to help out."

Dreiling said entrepreneurs should expect to have problems when they are getting started.

"When you go into business for yourself, you need to be an expert in many aspects of business," he said. "I learned that."

attend, Seely said. They have promoted the forum through "A Purple Affair," the Collegian and by calling Student Governing Association members to spread news by word of mouth.

N. Stewart "Neil" Anderson, Collegian editor, will walk throughout the audience to address questions from students.

Ring said she hopes to see many students take advantage of this chance to hear the candidates and ask questions.

"Attendance was low at the other two debates, and that was very disappointing," Ring said.

She said this was an excellent opportunity to see the differences among the candidates, especially on the issue of user fees.

"The debate at the residence halls was the first time student were really able to see any difference between Jeff and I," Ring said.

Peterson was unavailable for comment at press time.

"We've had a confirmation that Cessna will be participating," he said. "When that hits the news, we could have thousands of people showing up."

Stephens said both Cessna and American Insulated Wire are new plants and are looking to hire a large number of people.

"Both of those plants are going to have to totally man their plants," Stephens said.

Stephens said some other manufacturers that will be attending the fair include: Dayco Corporation, Fort Scott; Emerson Electric Company, Independence; Ace Electric, Columbus; and McNally Manufacturing, Pittsburg.

EPA sues Koch Industries for oil spillage

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — The Environmental Protection Agency and U.S. Coast Guard sued Koch Industries on Monday, claiming the pipeline operator has spilled 2.3 million gallons of oil into the waters of six states since 1990.

The roughly 300 separate spills polluted waterways, including wetlands, across Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Missouri and Alabama, the suit claims.

More than a third of the spills, however, were said to have occurred in Texas waters alone.

"The number of spills and the quantity that it is alleged make it a significant case," said Gordon Speights Young, an assistant U.S. attorney handling the case.

The suit seeks a maximum of $54 million in fines and was touted by the U.S. Attorney's Office in Houston as one of the largest cases brought to court using the Clean Water Act of 1990, as amended by the Oil Pollution Act of 1990. The suit also asks for injunctive relief in an effort to prevent future spills.

The spill information, prosecutors say, was based on Koch Industries' own reports to the EPA.

Koch Industries, through a prepared statement, did not reject the EPA's spill numbers. The Wichita-based company acknowledged that spills do occur in spite of its best efforts.

But Koch Industries noted it has reduced oil pipeline spills by 70 percent since 1990 while increasing pipeline mileage by more than 25 percent.

Koch's pipelines transport crude oil and refined products.

STUDENT ELECTIONS '95

Debate scheduled; Peterson declines

HOW & WHERE YOU CAN VOTE

■ You can vote from 7 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. today on the second floor of the K-State Union. Veterinary medicine students can vote from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Trotter Hall.

■ Don't forget to take your K-State ID with you.

Peterson says
Collegian editor is biased

AMY SIMON
Collegian

One pair of presidential and vice presidential candidates attended the candidate forum Tuesday afternoon in the K-State Union.

Liz Ring, junior in economics and history, and Paul Friedrichs, junior in agriculture economics, used the forum to present their platform to about 150 students in attendance.

The forum was sponsored by the Collegian and KSDB-FM 91.9's "A Purple Affair." It was moderated by "A Purple Affair" co-host Stephen Seely.

Student Body President Jeff Peterson said he decided not to attend the debate because he felt the format and questions of the debate would be slanted toward his opponent.

"I want to make it clear that we want to debate the issues and want the election to be based on the issues," Peterson said. "We would debate the issues in any forum that would be considered impartial.

"We wanted a forum that would represent the issues of concern to both students and the student body," he said.

Peterson referred to a column written at the beginning of the elections in which N. Stewart "Neil" Anderson, editor in chief of the Collegian, promised to not show bias in the elections.

"We would like to hold him to that promise he made to the students," Peterson said.

Peterson and running mate Brad Finkeldei addressed two specific concerns about the debate in a letter to Anderson.

"You have repeatedly been seen in public with candidate Liz Ring. These repeated appearances have happened too frequently to be discarded by us as coincidence and can no longer be ignored," Peterson and Finkeldei said in the letter.

Secondly, Peterson and Finkeldei said that unflattering facts about Ring's campaign were not brought out in the Collegian.

"Collegian city/government editor Mike Marlett has brought to our attention specific instances where you have suppressed negative coverage of the Ring campaign in the Collegian," the letter said.

"It is for those reasons that we didn't feel he would be able to host and organize an impartial debate," Peterson said.

Anderson said both points are skewed.

"Actually, I've probably been seen with all the candidates in public — Jeff, Liz, Scott Phillips, Andrew Tomb and Jeremy Blair," Anderson said.

"As for the suppression of negative coverage, they are trying to refer to our decision not to run a story on voter registration on the second day of the first elections," Anderson said.

He said it was decided, by all the editors, that the Collegian shouldn't run the story on the second day of voting after one full day of voting was done.

"The reporter also had concerns that some of the information crucial to the story was incomplete," Anderson said.

Peterson wants optional fees

Peterson

MIKE MARLETT
Collegian

Jeff Peterson, student body president, said his re-election depends on students being informed.

Peterson said he wants students to pay attention to issues like optional student fees and linear tuition.

"I think a lot more students were aware than really voted. We're counting on that fact," he said.

Peterson said he is in favor of optional student fees and linear tuition.

Optional student fees would allow students to pay for services like athletic events and those provided by Lafene Health Center only when they use them, not in fees at the beginning of the semester.

He said students should get what they pay for, not pay for something they might use.

But he said he didn't know which programs might be put on an optional fee.

"There are things we need to look at," he said. "How students would respond? What are the budgeting problems? We'd want to know how it would affect each service."

He said the K-State Union would probably remain on a fee because of difficulties in charging only users. However, he said, Union enhancement will

Ring supports some linear fees

Ring

MIKE MARLETT
Collegian

Liz Ring said she wants to be student body president.

She said she has the experience and the issues to do it.

Ring, junior in economics and history, said she supports paying fees on a per-credit-hour basis — up to a limit.

A cap on linear fees, she said, encourages people to explore minors and take classes for their own enrichment.

Even though people who take less hours than the cap would help pay for people who take more, a cap at 15 hours would be much better than the current system, she said.

"Right now, they're heavily burdened. It would help the people between seven and 14 hours," she said.

Some majors need a cap on fees, she said. Architectural-design and engineering students would have to pay a lot more money to get their degrees because of the number of courses they have to take, she said.

Jeff Peterson, student body president and Ring's opponent in the runoff election, has proposed user fees so students could pay for things like Lafene Health Center or athletics as students use them.

Ring said user fees is an area that needs to be explored carefully.

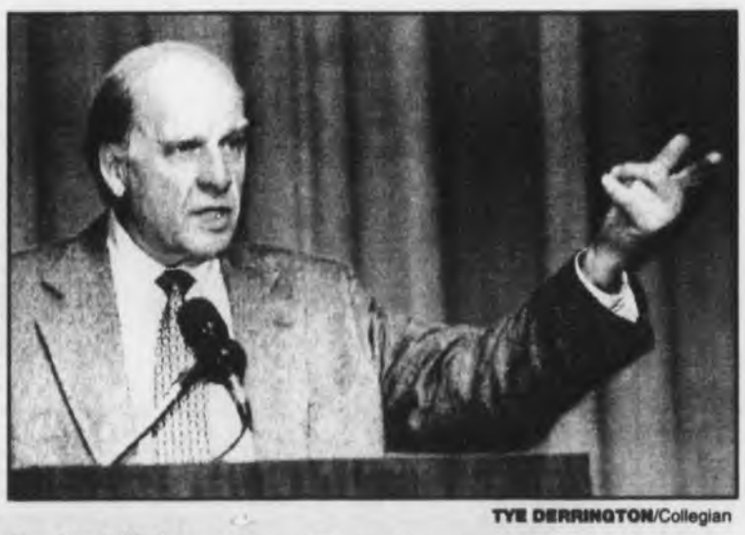
EARTH 26 Anniversary DAY

Nelson warns of fragile environment

JASON TYLER
Collegian

If today's society does not pay more attention to its fragile environment, it will damage the environment beyond repair for future generations, the founder of Earth Day said.



Gaylord Nelson, a former state senator, governor of Wisconsin, U.S. senator and Earth Day founder, addressed a near-capacity crowd in K-State Union Forum Hall.

Nelson said the ultimate goal for the United States should be to become an environmentally sustainable nation.

"Being an environmentally sustainable nation will allow people to meet the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their needs," he said.

One of the significant political obstacles to environmental progress is the widely held and mistaken belief that protecting the environment threatens jobs, he said.

▶ BIKE REGISTRATION

Registration may deter theft

AMY SIMON
LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Student government endorses bicycle registration if there is never a fee involved.

John Schoenthaler, member of the Parking and Campus Safety Committee, proposed the bill endorsing registration at the Student Senate meeting Tuesday night.

Student SENATE

Bicycle registration is an excellent way to plan for future bicycle programs on campus, Schoenthaler said. Registration would give planners an idea of how many bikes there are and what paths they use.

Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, said bicyclists should pay for the cost of the registration sticker, which is about 40 cents each.

"I don't think asking them to pay for the sticker is out of line," Halinski said.

John Riedel, chairman of Parking and Campus Safety Committee, said bicycle registration would help deter casual theft. The number of bicycle thefts on campus decreased in 1993 but increased again in 1994.

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said this bill does not go far enough in preventing the fee that will come.

"I hope that if there is going to be a fee, and there will be, that the sponsors of this bill will bring another resolution before us to repeal this," he said.

This bill endorsing bicycle registration without a fee passed 27-16-1.

Senate also considered a $100 allocation for a campus rape-prevention poster. The money would have been used to print more posters for distribution on campus and in the surrounding areas.

Ben Clouse, Allocations Committee chair, said his committee considered this allocation twice and did not pass it out of committee twice.

While this poster does fall within funding guidelines, Clouse said he did not feel this project was an efficient use of student funds.

▶ 2 VCRs, 1 PROJECTOR STOLEN FROM SEATON HALL; CLASSES AFFECTED

About $825 worth of equipment was taken from the architecture and design department in Seaton Hall.

Two VCRs and an overhead projector were stolen from Seaton 063. The theft was reported at 2:30 p.m. Monday, but the exact time of the theft has not yet been determined.

"We don't know when the last time the room was used," Richard Herrman, University detective, said.

The estimated time of the break-in is during the Easter weekend.

"I think the break-in occurred over the weekend. I had personally checked that equipment Thursday," Bill Jahnke, professor of architecture and design, said.

The police department is trying to determine the exact time of the theft by asking around and trying to locate any witnesses. It has also interviewed people in the architecture and design department.

The equipment was taken from a small storage room at the front of the auditorium. The door to the auditorium was not forced open, but the door to the equipment room appears to have been broken into.

The Seaton auditorium is a room with a long history of break-ins.

"We convinced the University that we needed to lock up this room last year, and we haven't had a problem since," Jahnke said. "This is the first incident in almost a year and a half."

The door to the auditorium and equipment room is locked at all times, but instructors and GTAs have been supplied with keys.

"That equipment is used by about 12 teachers every day," Jahnke said. "It's a major loss."

The theft has affected the architecture classes and the instructors' way of teaching.

"We're pretty upset about this," Jahnke said. "Architecture is a visual subject, and we use that equipment in the bulk of the way we teach."

The departments working on preventative measures with the police.

"We're trying to take the steps to make sure that this doesn't ever happen again," Jahnke said.

The Department of Architecture and Design is asking the student body to watch out for the stolen equipment. The stolen articles include a Panasonic four-head VCR, an Emerson video player and a 3-M overhead projector.

▶ VIGOROUS EXERCISE, NOT MODERATE, MIGHT BOOST LONGEVITY OF LIFE

CHICAGO (AP) — The latest in a spate of seemingly conflicting studies says that to live longer, you must exercise vigorously, not just moderately.

Lately, many exercise advocates, including the government's Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, have been pushing moderate activity.

But that won't boost longevity, judging from 26 years of data on 17,321 healthy male Harvard alumni who graduated between 1924 and 1954, researchers report in Wednesday's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Vigorous exercise was defined as any exertion that required at least six times as much energy as resting. That included walking 4 to 5 mph, jogging, swimming laps, playing tennis or even doing heavy chores around the yard — if they truly were heavy chores, like building stone fences, and "not just puttering around," said Dr. I-Min Lee, assistant professor of medicine at Harvard and lead author of the study.

The study did not spell out exactly how much of any specific activity would constitute vigorous exercise. But it said men who had the lowest risk of death burned at least 1,500 calories a week on vigorous activities.

That's equivalent to walking briskly 4 to 5 mph for at least 45 minutes a day, five days a week, or to jogging at least an hour three times a week, Lee said.

▶ QUESTIONS MIGHT INCREASE CHILDREN'S DESIRE TO LEARN SCIENCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Where does the sun go at night?" "Why do leaves fall from trees?" "How come the sky is blue?"

Children's questions can drive parents crazy, but they also are key to a child's ability to learn science, two new studies suggest — just as important as what happens in school.

"Let them explore, let them ask questions," former astronaut Mae Jemison told parents Tuesday. Most of all, don't worry if you don't know the answer because that's what science is all about, she said.

"Parents have to make sure they don't demotivate their kids, simply because they themselves are scared of science," Jemison said at a seminar for parents and science teachers.

Turn to a library or teacher for help if needed, Jemison told parents.

And encourage a child's natural curiosity with simple lessons. Help them look at animal tracks in the mud, sprout a lima bean on a window sill, read weather maps in the paper, measure the temperature outside or watch water change into ice.

▶ SPEECH TEAM

Depth a key to placing 5th at nationals

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

K-State's speech team placed fifth overall last week at the American Forensic Association's National Individual Events championship.

The team qualified 15 students for the tournament. Only national champion Texas and runner-up Bradley qualified more students.

Jarad Adams, junior in speech, won a national championship in communication analysis.

"Communication analysis is one of the smaller, more difficult events," Craig Brown, debate coach, said. "But it's also an event laypeople can watch and understand."

In communication analysis, speakers choose a specific communication act and explain it according to a communication theory. Adams' speech was a rhetorical criticism of conflict-resolution strategies used by Common Ground, an organization that mediates disputes between pro-life and pro-choice groups.

Adams also placed in the top 12 in informative speaking.

Brown attributed the team's strong performance at nationals to depth and the team's improvement in the interpretive events.

The interpretive events are poetry, prose, dramatic interpretation, duo and program of oral interpretation. The public-speaking events are informative, persuasive, extemporaneous, impromptu, communication analysis and after-dinning speaking.

"The last few years, our interpreters have gotten better due to the fact that we've been able to travel to tournaments and face good competition," Brown said.

Brown said K-State has traditionally had a strong speech program but that the program wasn't up to its traditional standards when he became coach in 1988. Budget restrictions had prevented the team from maintaining national prominence.

"My first two years weren't too pretty," Brown said.

Brown said financial support from the administration has helped the speech team return to being one of the nation's best. By 1991, the speech team was ranked 26th in the nation, and the team has finished in the top five the last four years.

Tim Schultz, national overall speech champion in 1993 and '94, credited Brown with the speech program's recent success.

"Craig is to forensic coaches what Roy Williams is to basketball coaches," Schultz said.

Both Schultz and Brown said having a large, talented and experienced team is advantageous because team members can help each other prepare for their events.

"Before this year, our interpreters had flirted with being good," Brown said. "This year, Stacy Chestnut and Rachel Hart were able to bring the level of the team up through peer coaching."

Chestnut finished sixth in oral interpretation and was in the top 24 in poetry and in prose. Hart placed in the top 24 in duo interpretation with John Baze.

Team members said long hours of research and practice are necessary to achieve the level of success K-State's speech team has experienced.

The speech season begins in August, with tournaments throughout the year leading up to nationals in April.

The top 10 percent of competitors qualify for nationals.

"It's incredibly time-consuming," Adams said. "I'm not happy until I have everything that's ever been written on the topic."

Brown said competitive speech benefits students in a number of ways.

"You learn commitment, a sense of focus — you learn how to challenge yourself," Brown said. "It also teaches time management since team members have to keep up with their classes in order to remain academically eligible to participate."

Although the speech team does recruit high-school forensics students, Brown said anyone is welcome to participate with the team. He said only half of the team members are speech majors.

"If someone is willing to put in the work, we'll give them the chance to do well," Brown said.

▶ PROFILE

Strengths of speaker being opinionated, humorous

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

Tim Schultz has always liked to talk and express his opinions.

However, it took him a while to realize that these characteristics could lead to national awards and recognition.

Schultz, a senior in radio and television and speech, is the two-time national overall intercollegiate speech champion.

He competed against the top 10 percent of collegiate orators at the national tournaments in 1993 and '94 and won both years.

"It's great to win in an individual event," Schultz said. "But winning the overall championship is the best you can do. You have to reach the finals in at least four events to have a chance to win overall."

Schultz competed in five speaking events: impromptu, informative, extemporaneous, persuasive and communication analysis. Schultz said his best event is extemporaneous speaking.

Competitors in the extemporaneous speaking event draw three questions having to do with politics, economics or international relations.

The speaker then chooses a question and has 30 minutes to prepare a speech.

Although notes are not banned in the extemporaneous speaking event, Schultz said none of the competitors use them at the higher levels of competition.

Schultz said he thinks his unique approach to extemporaneous speaking gave him an advantage.

"One thing I did differently than anybody else was that I was funny. I wasn't up there giving a stand-up routine, but I used humor, especially in the introduction," he said.

Schultz said in one speech dealing with Yasser Arafat and the Palestinian Liberation Organization, he quoted a joke about the PLO from one of David Letterman's top-10 lists and used it as a lead-in to his main points.

Schultz, who graduates in May, was not eligible to compete with the speech team this year because his four years of eligibility have expired.

He is, however, still involved with helping maintain K-State's speech team as one of the best in the country.

"I try to recruit high-school kids to come here," Schultz said. "Just to let them know we have a competitive speech program."

Schultz said the speech program at K-State has made great progress in the last several years.

"When I was a freshman, we were 26th in the nation. My sophomore year, our budget increased, so we were able to travel to better tournaments and compete against better competition. My last two years, the team finished third in the nation," Schultz said.

Schultz attributed the team's improvement in part to support from K-State's administration.

"We've been really lucky," Schultz said. "The administration has been very supportive, both financially and psychologically. They've made the speech team's success possible."

President Jon Wefald said support for the debate and speech teams reflects his belief in stressing academic excellence as a first priority.

Wefald also praised Schultz for his accomplishments.

"For Tim Schultz to be the national overall speech champion two years in a row is just incredible," Wefald said. "Tim is another great example of the excellent students from small towns in Kansas who come to K-State."

Schultz also received praise for his success from his coach and teammates.

"It's incredibly hard to comprehend what Tim has done," Craig Brown, debate coach, said. "Tim's senior year, it wasn't even close. The only question was who would finish second overall," he said.

Schultz, a Whitewater native, was honored by his hometown last month with the presentation of a road sign.

The sign reads: Home of Tim Schultz, National Champion, Public Speaking, 1993 & 1994.

Schultz said he plans to attend law school and use his speaking skills in a career in politics.

Air Force jet crashes, kills all 8 on board

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDER CITY, Ala. — An Air Force jet crashed Monday in a wooded area while trying to land at the airport in this eastern Alabama town.

All eight people on board were killed.

Fire Chief Ronnie Betts said there were multiple casualties but would not say how many. CNN said all eight people on board the jet were killed.

The plane was trying to make an uplanned landing at the Alexander City airport when it crashed near a subdivision four miles from Alexander City, Lt. Frances Sconi, a spokeswoman for Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland, said.

The plane had been en route to Randolph Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas, Lt. Col. Johnny Whitaker, a spokesman for Randolph, said.

He said the jet, which had taken off from Andrews, was based in Randolph and was carrying a crew of two and six passengers.

A Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, told the Associated Press that both military and civilian personnel were aboard the plane.

The plane did not appear to strike any homes when it went down around 6:30 p.m.

"It sounded like an earthquake when it came over our house," resident Miranda Wyckoff said to the Alexander City Outlook.

Wyckoff said she heard three explosions, including one as the jet plunged to the ground.

Betts said the plane broke into pieces.

"Not much is intact," he said.

Defense Department spokesman Kenneth Bacon said the plane was a C-21, a military version of the Learjet executive aircraft.

IN OUR OPINION

Supporting UPC benefits music scene

If we want big-name acts and entertainers in Manhattan, we need to put our full support behind UPC.

For all of you out there who cringe at the sound of country and want to hear some live music, check out the Big Head Todd and the Monsters and Dave Matthews Band at 7:30 p.m. Sunday at Bramlage Coliseum.

The bands have sold out in New York City, Los Angeles, Chicago, Kansas City and several other cities on their North American tour. Manhattan should be no exception.

If we want to have big-name acts and entertainers in Manhattan, we need to put our full support behind Union Program Council.

If it breaks even on this concert, there is a possibility that another big-name group, the Cranberries, will follow in the fall.

Dig into those wallets, sell plasma or do whatever it takes to get yourself a ticket.

Manhattan has been the hot spot as far as country acts, but it is a college town and is in desperate need of variety in the live-music scene.

UPC is willing to bring in nationally known acts, but we have to meet it halfway.

To show that you want more bands like Big Head Todd and Dave Matthews to perform in Manhattan, we need to get on the map.

Bringing in the bands costs about $20,000. So grab your friends, get a ticket and support UPC.

It's here for us, so let's be here for it.

Moderates easily get overlooked in the political world

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

It's not easy being a moderate.

The voice of the average person has probably never been heard before in this culture. The nation started out with only a select group (white, male landowners) doing the voting, and even they couldn't vote for senators or presidents.

Things have changed a lot since then, and now most every American older than 18 can vote.

That's where the rub lies. The fact is, most Americans don't vote. Instead, a small minority of people do, usually those with an agenda to push or an interest to promote.

Most people who vote are far to the left or right of center.

This last election cycle swept a lot of people out of office.

It was about time.

But were the November elections a mandate for a move to the far right?

This remains to be seen. A minority of the American voting public voted for a new crop of conservative extremists to take power. Most of them seem to be steeped in libertarian ideas of less government intervention in everyone's lives — except when it comes to the rights of the accused, the size of the military and police forces, family planning and morality. In those areas, these officials believe that more government is what American society needs.

The mistake these people are making is that many of them claim their ideas are traditional Judeo-Christian ethics. The fact is, they're not.

On the Christian side of the issues, Jesus Christ specifically called upon all of his followers to give away their possessions to the poor and follow him (Mark 10:21).

Jesus would be labeled a bleeding-heart liberal if he were walking around telling people to do that these days.

No wonder it was religious conservatives who framed him and executed him.

In fact, the Democrats, in spite of their glaring faults, have been consistently working to help poor people for many years. Their big-government approach to solving problems is doomed to fail, but at least they advocate the needs of the underprivileged.

Even though Jesus was a leftist in his day and his followers lived communally (not capitalistically) after his ascension into heaven, the extreme left is out of whack, too. Communist and socialist countries tend to ruin the individual, stamp out diversity, instill common moral principles and advocate strong central military forces.

Sound like anyone you know on Capitol Hill?

On the Jewish side of things, most Jews do not advocate putting their religious ideas into governmental practice in the United States. They usually only advocate strong ties to Israel.

One Jewish man is fighting for the cause of moderation right now.

He's a Kansas son named Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa.

Unlike Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., Specter has known what it's like to be a religious minority in a country that advocates putting the religious ideas of the majority into public practice.

They grew up in the same town just a few years apart, but Specter's experiences with religious zealots within his own political party and in the public in general have convinced him that being a moderate is the best policy.

And he's running for the Republican presidential nomination that Dole is.

Specter probably won't get the nod. On primary day, the people who will turn out to vote will probably mostly be religious zealots and bigots.

They don't tend to vote for moderates who are reasonable and can see many sides of an issue.

Specter is doomed unless moderate people join the Republican Party and vote for him. I'm considering switching from the Libertarian Party just to vote for him, because Specter is more libertarian than the Libertarians these days.

Unlike other Republicans, Specter is moderate and experienced enough to work for a society in which people "live and let live."

"Live and let live" is a slogan from Alcoholics Anonymous. It's also an old libertarian motto. It's an idea that Republican extremists have subtly been changing to "live somewhere else and let me live."

So much for tolerance.

We moderates have to stand up to the extremists of all parties who have been dominating the agenda. Even though most Americans are politically and socially moderate, most don't have the free time (unlike retirees and some business people) to flood Congressional fax machines, call talk-radio programs, watch C-SPAN and attend rallies.

We do, however, have the time to vote. We have to vote for moderate politicians, or we will have no one to blame for the shift from extreme liberalism to extreme conservatism that is happening but ourselves.

KADY MASSEY

Ah, spring — it's finally in the air.

I can tell by the blooming of flowers, the chirping of birds and the way the campaign signs melt off the trees in the gentle rains.

I love this time of year.

I can sit back, close my eyes and pretend I'm somewhere other than Kansas.

This is also the time of year when I casually glance at my calendar and realize that (eeek) finals start in three weeks and I still have a couple of papers due.

I also remember that even though this school year is almost over, I still have a good four more years to go.

How comforting.

Yeah, spring burnout is upon us. This is the time of year when half the architecture majors I know decide chucking it all and enrolling in Burger College might be just as fulfilling.

A friend of mine decided she's sick of school and doesn't even want to hear the voice of any of her professors. She hasn't been to class in six weeks.

Needless to say, no one sees renewed financial aid in her immediate future.

Another girl I know has been going to school, including summer school, for four years straight. She figures she can get a degree in anything in three semesters or less but thinks she'll end up committing a violent act if she tries it.

What is it about this time of year that makes a majority of us decide to pitch it all and become beach bums? Is it the weather or something in the water?

I almost never hear about this phenomenon in the fall. Only spring and summer seem to bring this on.

The temperature goes up, concentrating on anything gets harder, and the blood runs quicker.

Actually, there are a lot of perfectly natural reasons for why warm weather melts our brains. Extended hours of sunlight, tilt of the earth, microwaves, etc.

Maybe it's a biological thing.

Almost the entire animal and plant worlds use this time of year to procreate. Why shouldn't we humans get a little randy?

After all, that much sexual tension in the air is bound to mess with our heads in more ways than one.

History has shown that this time of year is just about perfect for letting the hormones run wild.

The Celts and pagans made a holiday out of it called Beltane. Everyone in the community got together and danced around bonfires, leaping over the flames to show the crops how high to grow.

Then, after the fire had died down, couples went off to find a quiet corner to do whatever came naturally.

A guy I know has started tracking these feelings in himself. He claims this is usually the time of year when he falls madly in lust with someone who's perfectly wrong for him.

He figures lust is a basic animal emotion and better for everyone if not acted upon. (It took six or seven springs for him to figure this out.)

So, going a little bats is perfectly OK and acceptable. There's even a precedent if you feel you must justify yourself. However, the key is to work out all these pent-up feelings without blowing your GPA.

This is the time of year when half the architecture majors I know decide that chucking it all and enrolling in Burger College might be just as fulfilling.

How can we combat this nasty seasonal occurrence?

Heck if I know.

The people who seem to get hit the hardest are the ones who spend the most time on campus.

So go away for awhile.

Drive out to Tuttle Creek and chase waves, go shopping, get a tan, read a trashy novel.

To quote the inestimable Erin Mansur-Smith, "run nekkid through the flowers."

Sounds like good advice to me.

Remember to come back to Earth long enough to study and turn projects in, but try to get everything out of your system.

There's nothing worse than leftover spring fever in November.

Columnist didn't research well

Dear editor:

Kathleen Mastio is correct in her assertion that the media is often responsible for distorting the facts about environmental issues. Her column is itself a rather pointed example of this. She states that the ozone layer is thinnest over the poles and that solar winds are a likely cause of the ozone hole.

"Unfortunately, these people often don't understand the issues and really don't seem to want to do their homework."

DOUG GOODIN
assistant professor of geography

These elements contribute, but the recent discovery of hydrogen fluoride in the atmosphere above Antarctica provides clear evidence that anthropogenic industrial chemicals are prominent contributors to ozone depletion in the polar atmosphere.

Mastio further states that there are as many scientists who believe the Greenhouse Effect is a fraud as there are who don't. No scientist worth his or her salt doubts the reality of the Greenhouse Effect. A very simple calculation shows that, without the effect of the so-called greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, the global mean temperature would be a rather chilly minus 20 degrees Celsius, rather than the current value of about 15 degrees Celsius. If you're curious, stop by my office and I'll show you the math.

The debate Mastio refers to is really over whether or not human activities are enhancing the Greenhouse Effect and warming the atmosphere, for which there is no clear answer yet.

From Rush Limbaugh to Jane Fonda to our own Collegian columnists, media figures often speak out on all sides of the environmental debate, and often the opinions of these entertainers are taken seriously by the general public. Unfortunately, these people often don't understand the issues and really don't seem to want to do their homework.

We need to send a message to these influential people; if you don't understand the issues, please stay out of the discussion.

Doug Goodin
assistant professor of geography

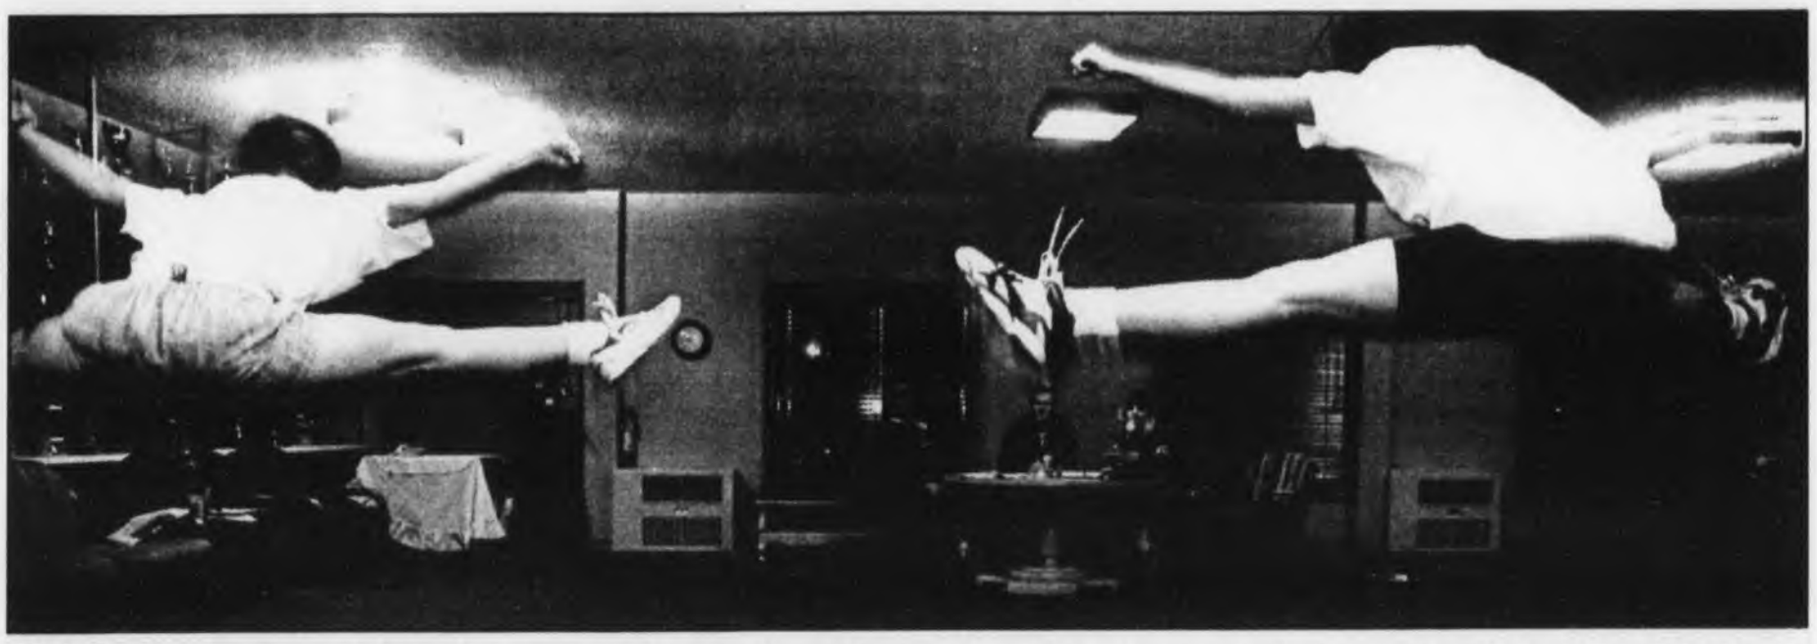
Columnist needs science course

Dear editor,



We are writing in response to Kathleen Mastio's April 17 column.

In regard to her obvious lack of understanding of atmospheric processes, we highly recommend that she enroll in Environmental Geography I for the fall semester.

Maybe she will start to understand that ozone is indeed a pollutant in the lower atmosphere, while it is an essential greenhouse gas in the upper atmosphere.

And thank God for greenhouse gases — it would be pretty cold without them.

Polishing off the Derby

They dance, draw and deck themselves out in disguise, all in hopes of winning the spring equivalent to Homecoming — Derby Days

Sponsored by Sigma Chi, Derby Days is a four-day philanthropy that involves sororities competing in various events for the coveted title of Derby Days Champion.

"We're really looking forward to this year's competition," said David Harrison, Derby Days chairman at Sigma Chi. "Derby Days is something we plan all year for, and when it finally happens, it's an amount of fun that's out of control."

Harrison, sophomore in chemical engineering, said this year's events encompass a variety of competitions.

The festivities start April 26 with a kickoff party at Bombers. Next, on April 27, the sorority dance competition takes place at Snookie's Bar. A volleyball tournament is scheduled for April 28, with the final game day festivities and banner judging finishing on April 29, Harrison said.

"We've heard a lot of the sororities saying how excited they are. Some of them have been preparing for this for months. I guess some of them are pretty serious about winning this year," Harrison said.

All the proceeds from the event will go to the Children's Miracle Network.

"We all love the competition, but the best part is the money we donate to those who need it," he said.

To help the sororities prepare for Derby Days, each of the Sigma Chis choose a sorority house to coach during the week.

"We have a draft to see who gets what house, and then those guys are the ones in charge of firing up the girls," Harrison said.

Often, coaches will do special things for the sorority houses to get more people involved.

"A lot of guys will throw parties for the house or other things to get them excited," Harrison said. "It's really neat because that way, the guys get to know the girls in the house. They aren't just cheering for somebody they don't know. You really want your team to win because you realize how hard each of the girls have worked."

Harrison said Sigma Chi will also have a mystery event this year.

Last year's mystery event involved a kiddie swimming pool filled with water, flour and oats. Each of the sororities had a delegate reach inside the pool and try to find a frisbee with the sororities letters on it.

"It was a soupy-goopy mess, and eventually, everyone got thrown in the pool," Harrison said. "This year's mystery event will be equally as fun."

As Derby Days defending champions, the women of Delta Delta Delta have been preparing for some time, said Kerry Ginie, a Tri-Delt member.

"We are very motivated to defend our title," Ginie, senior in English, said. "Everybody is excited to prove we can win it again."

Ginie said the Tri-Delts have a special drive that keeps them motivated for the Derby Days competition.

"We have kind of a mascot called Tatonka," Ginie said. "It's a bull made like a pinata, and we bring him with us to all the events."

The Tri-Delts have used their Tatonka for the past five years, and the women in the house like to see him as a source of inspiration, Ginie said.

"Usually, one of the other houses or coaches from the other houses try to take him," she said. "He's been stolen, beat up, hidden and even burned. But he's always there, year after year."

Other sororities on campus prepare for Derby Days by developing a theme for the week of competition.

Alpha Chi Omega is working on a theme for Derby Days that involves members of the house dressing in grunge, Sarah Dandridge said.

"We're so excited and think we will do really well this year. Our dance and our banner and attitude will all have to do with our theme, and hopefully, this will get us pumped for the competitions," said Dandridge, junior in human development and family studies.

The Kappa Alpha Theta house is also preparing for the competition with a theme.

"Our theme this year is 'turning into something wild' with kind of a jungle angle," Stacy Foulk, sophomore in business, said.

"Our whole house is working extra hard," she said. "We're out to win it this year. We've had tryouts in all our events so we can get the best people to work the hardest and have the most fun."

Shawna Smith, member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, said the reason her house gets so excited about the events is the competitive nature they inspire.

"Derby Days brings everyone in our house together because we all want to win," Smith said. "I personally plan on talking to each member to try to recruit them for each of the events."

Carey Fauss, member of Sigma Kappa, said it is easier to get involved in Derby Days than another philanthropy because there are so many days of competition.

"Most philanthropies are only one day, and it's hard to get motivated," said Fauss, freshman in international business and marketing. "But with Derby Days, you have several days to be excited. That way, if you can't participate one day, you can compete in something else a different day."

Foulk said the friendly competition is what motivates the Thetas.

"It's fun to compete against other houses because so many of the girls are your friends," Foulk said. "You want to do well because everybody you know there is watching you perform."

Ginie said it is important for the sororities to have fun because it is an important philanthropy.

"We love the competition, but especially when we know the money raised will be given to those who need it," she said. "The competition is all in good fun, and it's all for a great cause."

BRIEFS & NOTES

TICKETS are on sale

With K-State featuring seven home football games this season, tickets can be hard to get.

So instead of waiting until the last minute, fans can pre-order tickets for all home games and the four away games.

Season tickets for the general public bench seats are $135 if postmarked by May 1. After May 1, the price increases to $145.

Reserved seats for individual games are $20. However, for the KU game, tickets are $25.

Tickets in the Knothole section, which is located on the grass east of Vanier Football Complex, are only $10.

This area is reserved for fans high-school age and younger only, but this section is not available for the KU game.

Chair seating is expected to be available for the Kansas game.

Any questions can be directed to the K-State ticket office at 1-800-221-CATS.

SPRING game on tap

The K-State football team will conclude spring practices at 3 p.m. Saturday with the Spring Football Game at KSU Stadium.

The Spring Game concludes three weeks of drills for the Wildcats, who began practices March 29.

There is no admission charge for the game.

But K-State will be asking for a $3 donation.

The donation will go toward the Minor Sports Program.

Last season, a donation was collected for Farrell Library.

In last season's game, quarterback Matt Miller was the star as he filled in for an injured Chad May.

This season, Miller is in the No. 1 slot again because transfer Cody Lee Smith will not play.

Smith is still sidelined because of a stomach virus that forced him to return to his home in California.

AGGERS up for new job

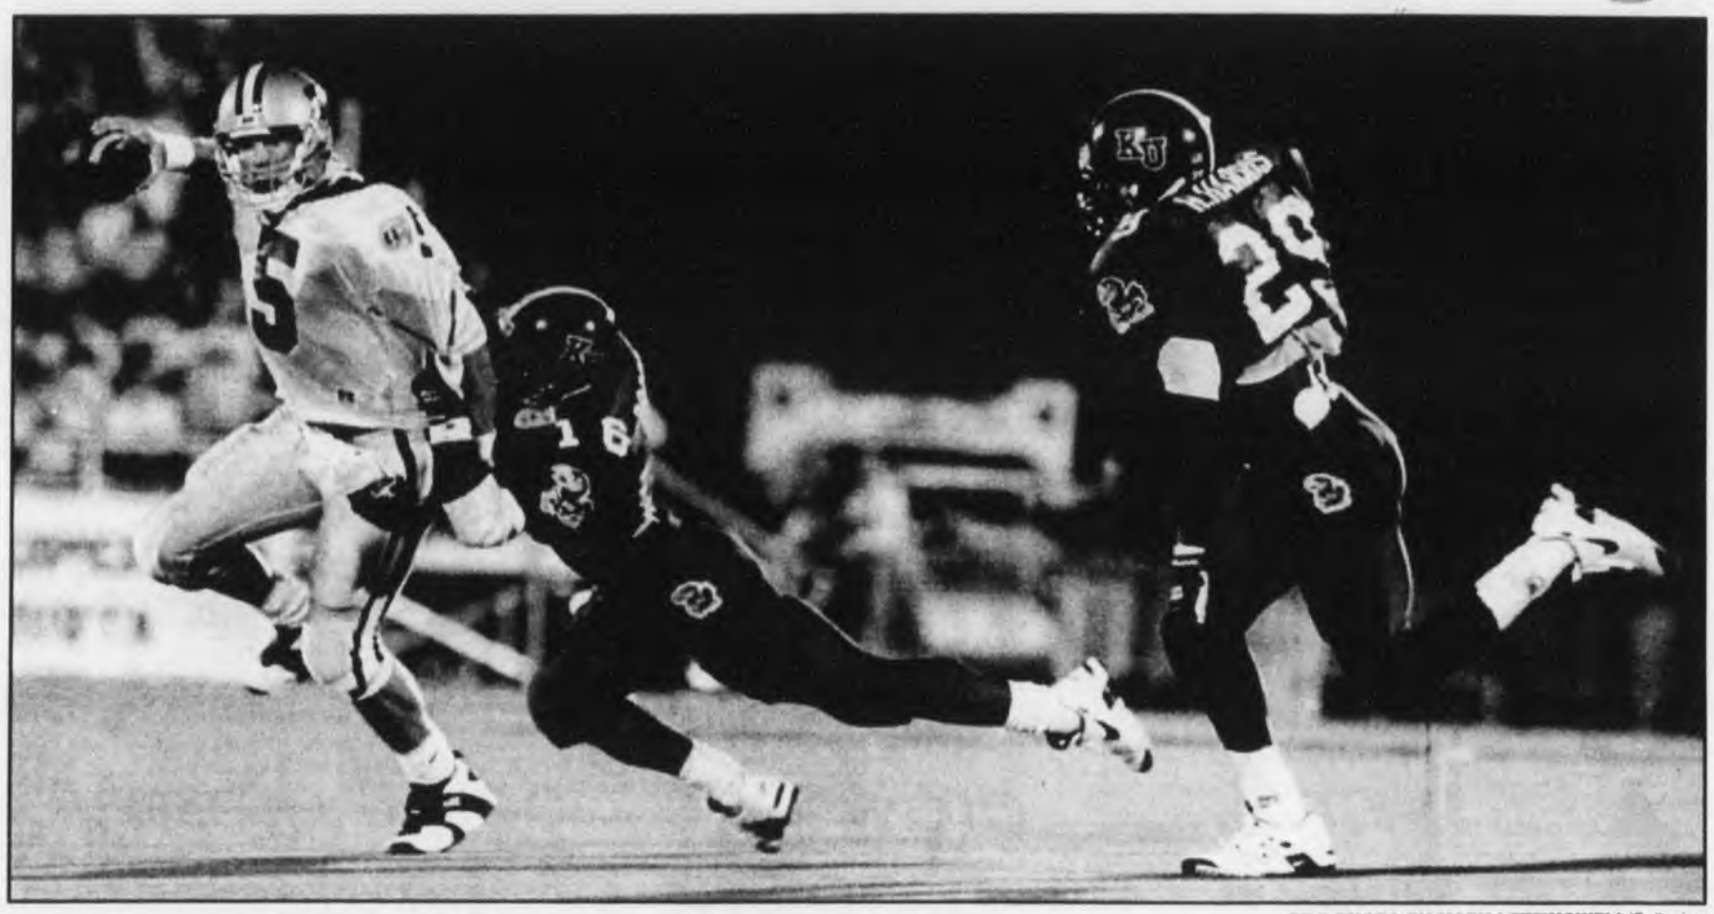
Steve Aggers, an assistant basketball coach at K-State, is reportedly a finalist for the head coaching position at Eastern Washington.

A member of the Eastern Washington search committee said Aggers is scheduled for an interview.

Aggers, who came to K-State with basketball head coach Tom Asbury, is being considered along with former Idaho and Texas A&M coach Kermit Davis and Seattle Pacific coach Ken Bone.

Aggers spent four years with Asbury at Pepperdine and helped the Waves to three NCAA Tournaments.



"Steve's an excellent coach in the area of X's and O's. He relates well to the players," Asbury said.

"It's like having another head coach."

The K-State Wildcats will throw their best quarterback, their best running back and their best tackle tandem into the 1995 NFL draft on Saturday and Sunday.

There is one problem, though.

This year's draft is loaded with offensive linemen, running backs and signal callers.

With former K-State running back Leon Edwards and wide receiver Ron Brown destined for the Canadian Football League, four Wildcat football players hope to make their mark in the NFL.

Quarterback Chad May would bring a strong arm, a quick release and good pocket awareness to an NFL team.

But would he also bring an attitude?

May was once listed among the top three quarterbacks in the draft, but that might have changed.

"The word's going around the NFL that I've got a bad attitude," May said.

The reason May's stock might be falling is that so many NFL teams are figuring in a player's personality and character when they draft a player.

"Coaches want a quarterback they can talk to, not talk through," one AFC scout said.

Brooks

"I believe Chad is a good guy, but there are some others that question his cocky attitude."

May said his attitude is born of confidence, not cockiness.

"That's part of my game," May said. "I like telling people I'm going to go out there and do something and then go and do it. I think it's fun, but it's costing me some money right now."

May's physical talents outweigh any possible attitude problem the signal caller could have. May said he figures to be the third or fourth quarterback taken and hopes to go as high as the mid-first round.

This year's quarterback talent pool is overflowing, with May in the company of Alcorn State's Steve McNair, Penn State's Kerry Collins and BYU's John Walsh.

Many NFL insiders are comparing this draft with the 1983 draft, which saw six quarterbacks selected in the first round. Teams with the greatest need for a quarterback include the Indianapolis Colts, Houston Oilers, Cleveland Browns, Buffalo Bills and Minnesota Vikings.

Then there is Barrett Brooks. Like May, Brooks is listed among the top four players at his position.

And like the quarterback position, the offensive tackle position is loaded with talent.

Brooks, at 6 feet, 4 inches and 310 pounds, is a tremendous athlete. With a 410-pound bench press and a 5.1 time in the 40-yard dash, Brooks won't last long in the draft, an NFL draft expert said.

"Is he a first-round pick? I don't know," an AFC scout said. "He should definitely go in the second.

"If Barrett falls into the third round, he's a steal."

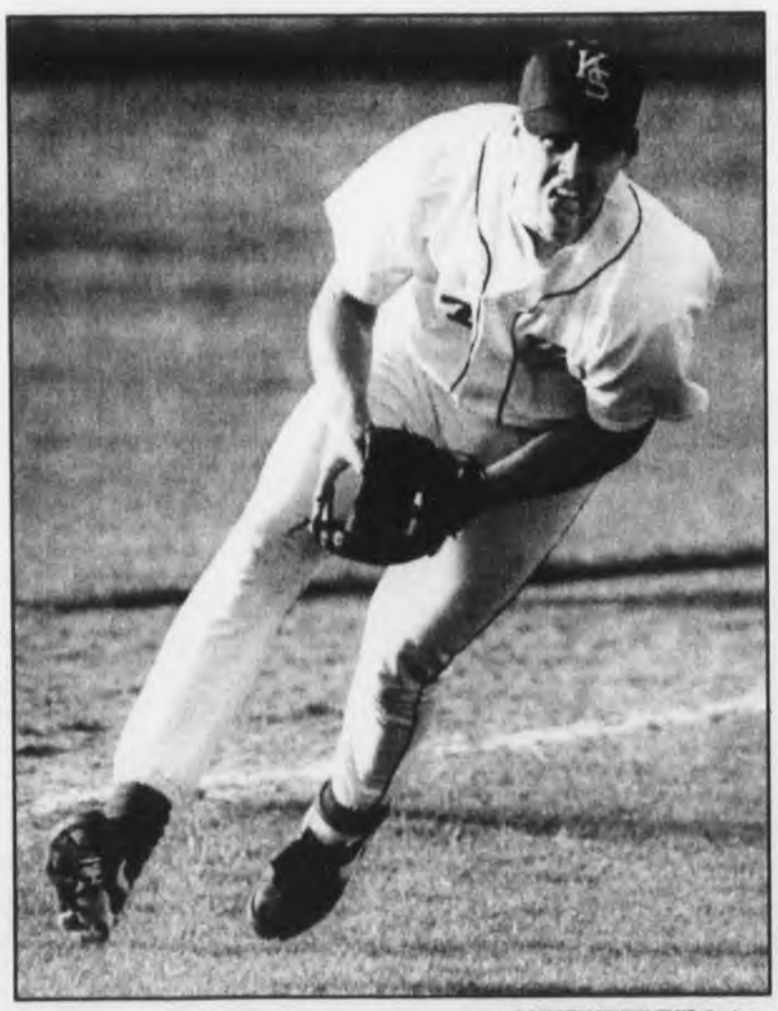
The scouts like his quickness and pass-blocking skills. He also improved his stock at the Senior Bowl when he proved his run blocking abilities to scouts and coaches.

"I knew I could run block, but I'm not sure the scouts knew that until the Senior Bowl," Brooks said.

Smith

"I just didn't get the opportunity to do that often at K-State because we had a future NFL quarterback in Chad, and he threw all the time."

Brooks said he is excited about the opportunity to play in the NFL and might be too excited to watch it on television. Teams with the greatest need for an offensive lineman include the Cincinnati Bengals, Pittsburgh Steelers, Kansas City Chiefs, San Diego Chargers and Miami Dolphins.



Things were going all right for K-State's all-time leading rusher J.J. Smith before the Aloha Bowl.

Smith had rushed for 227 yards against UNLV, breaking the K-State single-game rushing record.

Then came the injury. Smith pulled some nerves in his hip and groin area and was played sparingly in the Aloha Bowl.

"It hurt so bad that I had trouble

Whenever the words "K-State vs. Kansas" are mentioned, people start to imagine battles on the hardwood or struggles on the gridiron.

However, the K-State-KU rivalry also carries over to the baseball field.

That's why K-State coach Mike Clark and KU coach Dave Bingham scheduled this season's games to be played all at once in a five-game series.

"Most people think of the rivalry, and football or basketball comes to their minds," said Wildcat first baseman and Lawrence native Brad Harker.

"But we're pretty intense on the baseball field also. We try to approach each of these games one at a time, and each game is important.

"I can't lie — these are must-win games."

And winning is exactly what the Cats did after dropping the opening game in Lawrence.

Saturday's game started out gloomy for the Cats as Kansas jumped out to a 5-0 lead.

KU ace Jamie Splittorff was cruising through the K-State lineup while only giving up four hits in seven innings.

Splittorff then hit the wall in the eighth inning as the Cats scored two runs off him to force him from the game.

With Splittorff gone, the Cats' bats exploded for 10 runs.

The 10-run rally was highlighted by a David Hendrix grand slam.

"The guy threw me a hanging curve ball," Hendrix said. "I got a hold of it, and it went."

Clark said once Splittorff was gone, he knew the Cats could get to the Jayhawks.

"We've been in a slump the past three games," Clark said.

"Coach Ward said to me one of these innings we're going to explode, and that's exactly what we did."

K-State used that momentum to carry into the third game of the series on Sunday as the Cats jumped on Clay Baird with five runs in the first inning.

KU managed to creep back into the game on Cats' starter Jon Oiseth to get the game to 5-4.

Then, Clark went to his bullpen, and Larry Walty came on to pitch.

The Cats tacked on two more runs to make the score 7-4 before Kansas answered with a rally of its own.

After Josh Igou hit one to the right-center pine trees to cut the lead to 7-5, KU scored another run in the eighth and advanced the tying run to second base.

Walty responded and struck out the batter to end the KU threat.

"I got him on two curve balls, and I didn't know whether or not to come back with another one. I threw him a curve ball and got lucky and struck him out," said Walty, who raised his record to 2-4 on the season.

Clark said the strikeout was a big one he knew Walty could get.

KU Relays set to start

Jill Montgomery and Matt Jeffrey will kick off the 70th Annual Kansas Relays.

■ The 70th Annual Kansas Relays starts in Lawrence on Thursday. Nicole Green will return to action for the first time since straining her hamstring at the Texas Relays on April 8.

The pair will compete in the heptathlon and the decathlon today and Thursday in Lawrence.

However, track coach Cliff Rovelto said Montgomery might be pulled from the event if the weather turns bad.

"She is ready to have a real significant score," Rovelto said.

"Winning the event may be a foregone conclusion. What's meaningful right now is getting a good score."

Distance runners Ryan Clive-Smith and Amy Marx will compete in the 5,000 meters Thursday evening.

"On the women's side, who is improving the most is Amy Marx," Rovelto said.

"She's running PRs all the time, and she's really comfortable running now."

Aside from field events, a limited amount of individual events are open to athletes at the meet.

The open events include the 100 meters, 110-meter hurdles and the 5,000 meters.

Karissa Owens will return for the first time since straining her hamstring at the Texas Relays April 8.

She will be joined in the event by Nicole Green.

Green automatically qualified at the College Station Relays March 18 in the 400 meters.

Owens added her name to the list of 100-meter qualifiers at the Southwest Texas Invitational March 25.

"There aren't a lot of individual events open at this meet," Rovelto said. "If you want to get in a lot of running, you have to enter all the relays."

K-State could also have a team of javelin throwers on its way to the national championships this spring.

Kirsten and Kristen Schultz have both provisionally qualified for the meet.

Aaron Larson and T.J. Turner both provisionally qualified at the K.T. Woodman Classic at Wichita State University Saturday.

Larson placed second in the meet with a throw of 222 feet, 9 inches.

Turner finished third with 222'7".

"Those are significant marks for those guys," Rovelto said.

"They might have to throw further to get to nationals, but those are still great throws."

■ K-State came through with some surprises Saturday.

The surprises came at the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla.

Despite a difficult week of training, three athletes provisionally qualified for the NCAA Outdoor Championships.

Asbury announces official signings of Eaker, Hubert

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

K-State has welcomed two new hoopsters to its program.

Wildcat basketball coach Tom Asbury announced the official signing of Gerald Eaker on Thursday and Anton Hubert on Monday.

Eaker, a 6-foot, 11-inch, 230-pound center from Southeastern Community College, is a former McDonald's High-School all-American from Chicago's St. Joseph High School. St. Joseph's has also produced other basketball talents, like NBA star Isiah Thomas and former K-State center Deryl Cunningham.

"In Gerald, you've got the size factor we've been looking for," Asbury said. "He's a quality player who will give us immediate help in the low post. He has excellent skills. All he needs to do is work on his strength and conditioning to be a really good player in the Big Eight."

Eaker originally committed to play at Ohio State. After redshirting his freshman year, Eaker played behind Lawrence Funderburke, averaging 3.3 points, 2.7 rebounds and 1.5 blocks per game. During his short stint at Ohio State, Eaker started five games, including two Big Ten contests.

While playing at Southeastern, Eaker averaged 15.1 points, 6.9 rebounds and 4.2 blocks per game. He scored a career-high 32 points against the NJCAA Division II national champion, Northern Iowa Area Community College.

"He's a very good player, and his best basketball is in front of him," Southeastern coach Jim Wyatt said . "He runs the floor well and is a good athlete. He's a solid scorer down low and knows where he is with his back to the basket."

Hubert, a 6-foot junior-college all-American from McPherson Central Community College, comes to K-State averaging 22.4 points a game and shooting 57.8 percent from the floor.

This also includes hitting 45 percent of his shots from behind the three-point line and 74.5-percent shooting from the free-throw line.

"He's so athletic. He probably had 35 or 40 dunks this year," McPherson coach Mike Beard said. "He can score.

"At 6', he's not real big, but teams would try to guard him with bigger people, and he was just too quick. Other teams would try smaller guys, and he would just jump over them."

During high school, he was heavily recruited by North Carolina until he sustained a knee injury prior to his senior season.

Despite the injury, Hubert still has a 39" vertical leap.

Beard said defenders have to respect Hubert's jump shot as well as his ability to drive to the basket.

"You have to respect his shooting, but if you step out to guard him, you take a risk that he'll go by you and dunk."

The Charlotte, N.C., native led McPherson to a 24-4 mark this season and was named first-team all-American in Division II Community College ranks by the Basketball Times.

"Anton is a terrific athlete, an excellent shooter and a good defender who will give us some much-needed perimeter play," Asbury said.

Although Hubert is more of a shooting guard, Asbury said he will occasionally play the point position too.

"He's a combo guard. His natural position is at the off guard, but he'll also play some point for us," Asbury said.

With the signings of Eaker and Hubert, K-State now has a total of five new players in the Wildcat program.

During the fall signing period, Asbury signed 6'8" forward Manny Dies from Wichita South, Wichita Northwest's 6'10" forward Shawn Rhodes and 6'9" center Johnnie Williams from Cloud County Community College.

Asbury said this class filled some of the holes that needed to be addressed.

Golf teams ready to take on Big Eight Tournament field

BERNIE HANEY
Collegian

There are four tournaments down, but the most important tournament is left for the men's golf team.

The Big Eight Championships on Monday and Tuesday will determine whether the team qualifies for the NCAA Central Regional in Houston on May 18-20.

"We still have a chance at the regionals if we play well at the Big Eight," K-State golf coach Mark Elliott said.

Elliott

Elliott said seven teams make it to the regionals, and the team has to beat Nebraska and Colorado to have a legitimate shot to make it for only the second time in the school's history.

"If we can finish fourth, we're probably a lock for the NCAA. If we finish sixth, we're still on the bubble," Elliott said. "I don't know. A lot of things are depending on how we do in the Big Eight."

The tournament is being played at the par-70 Prairie Dunes Golf Course in Hutchinson.

"Prairie Dunes is ranked 21st in the nation by Golf Digest and 30th in the world," Elliott said. "It's a golf course where weather dictates the scores."

The favorite in the field is the defending Big Eight champion team, Oklahoma State, which is ranked No.1 in the nation.

Elliott said the difficulty of the course will help the lower teams challenge the top half of the Big Eight.

"It gives us a chance because it's not a real easy golf course, so the scores won't be real low," Elliott said.

"We have a group of guys that can shoot 70 to 75 every day at Prairie Dunes, but they've never done that. Whether they do it or not remains to be seen," he said.

Going into the tournament, the team has posted first-, sixth-, eighth- and 12th-place finishes in the spring tournaments.

The team's latest match was a shortened tournament due to inclement weather at the Bent Brook/Blazer Invitational last week in Birmingham, Ala. The team played two rounds and wound up in a tie for 12th place out of 18 teams.

The hot player for the Wildcats is Scott Hovis, who has placed in the top 10 in three of the tournaments.

Elliott said the team can't have two or three players play badly in the 54-hole tournament.

"They can't play above their heads but play up to their capabilities," Elliott said.

The women's golf team will finish out its spring season in Stillwater, Okla., for the Big Eight Championships on Monday and Tuesday.

"I hope we bring everybody together and have a good showing," assistant golf coach Tim Jennings said.

"I think, realistically, that fifth or sixth place would be a good way to end the season," he said.

The tournament will consist of 54 holes at Stillwater Country Club. They will play 36 holes on Monday and finish up with 18 holes on Tuesday.

"I heard it's a pretty tough little golf course, so it will be a test of endurance as well as skill," Jennings said.

The team's best finish this spring was third at the Southwest Missouri State Invitational.

In the other three spring tournaments, the team had a sixth-place finish and two 10th-place finishes.

"The best way to describe the season is inconsistency," Jennings said.

Jennings said the concentration is there, but he said the players over-analyze what they're doing.

"They think too much. The team is spending too much time analyzing how they're swinging it, rather than just swinging at it," Jennings said. .

"It depends if they want it or not. We'll find out next week," he said.

walking, much less running," Smith said.

His injury could not have come at a worse time.

Scouts have demanded that Smith run and work out for them this off-season, even though Smith's injury hasn't healed.

He recently ran a slow 4.61 in the 40-yard dash.

"I've told the scouts about my injury, but I don't think they factor that," Smith said. "All they see is my slow 40 time, and everyone knows I can do better than that."

In fact, Smith used his usual 4.4 speed to average 26.9 yards on kick returns. His experience returning kicks just might help him get drafted.

"If he was a running back without his kick-return ability, he'd have a hard time," one AFC scout said.

"His open-field running and his hands make him a good third-down back, but with some average workouts recently, he's fallen into the sixth- to seventh- round range, or possibly a free agent."

Teams with the greatest need for a third-down back and kick returner include the Green Bay Packers, New York Jets, Atlanta Falcons, New York Giants and Kansas City Chiefs.

Jim Hmielewski, like Smith, could be a late-round selection in the draft.

But, more likely, the 6'6", 310-pound offensive tackle will become a free agent.

The questions about this Wildcat prospect appear to be regarding his athleticism and his deep drop pass protection.

"His technique and athletic ability are lacking," one AFC scout said.

"He has proven that he can play on both sides of the line in a run-blocking capacity. He would fit into a push-shove offense nicely, perhaps Pittsburgh, Washington or the L.A. Raiders."

The one thing that seems to be around Hmielewski's neck is his Aloha Bowl performance, where he gave up several sacks to Boston College defensive end Mike Mamula. His draft stock began to plummet.

Hmielewski

But Hmielewski would bounce back with a solid performance weeks later in the Hula Bowl against Kevin Carter of Florida.

"I went up against Kevin Carter and did real well," Hmielewski said.

"And he's supposed to be a first-round draft choice."

Still, scouts have their questions, and the second day of the draft on Sunday will be his judgment day.

"He's a long shot to get drafted, but he should be on some team's 53-man roster at the start of the season," an AFC scout said.

27 professors retire, honored

Friends, family pay tribute, thank them for service

CARRIE COX
Collegian

K-State's most distinguished professors were honored Tuesday at a reception commending faculty members who are retiring this year.

Dennis Law, Chairman of the Academic Affairs Faculty Senate, welcomed 27 of the 47 K-State retiring faculty members, along with the friends and family who joined them.

President Jon Wefald praised the faculty members for their years of service to K-State.

"You represent the heart and soul of academic enterprises at K-State," Wefald said. "You are the backbone for what K-State has become, and it would not be able to operate in the effective way it does without your service."

Wefald said the reception was a celebration for all of the good things each faculty member had done that often go unrecognized.

Faculty members should be commended not only for their service to K-State, but also to the state of Kansas, Wefald said.

"We deeply appreciate what you've done in terms of teaching, research and service," Wefald said. "In some way, K-State touches virtually every Kansan, and you have done the same.

"By recognizing you, we hope we can give a very small token of our deep appreciation of everything you've done."

The honored faculty members were presented with a certificate, pin and pen by Wefald, as he spoke briefly about each individual's accomplishments.

Beverly Kindler, county extension agent, was honored for serving 42 years at K-State, the most of any retiring member present.

"It's so nice to be honored in this way," Kindler said. "Every day of my job was a challenge, and that's why I loved it. But, the people I worked with made it easy."

Deanne Wright, associate professor of agriculture, said some of her favorite memories during her 20 years at K-State involved the people she interviewed.

"People would expect that I most enjoyed talking with the Nobel Prize winners or others who were distinguished in that way," Wright said, "but I always have the deepest respect for the creative, innovative, hard-working faculty members, along with the people from small towns." Wright said.

Shian Perng, professor of statistics for 27 years, said he will miss teaching at K-State.

"I always wanted to be a teacher," Perng said. "Sometimes, you find it difficult to communicate because statistics is complicated, but it's just the details that are complicated. I've always enjoyed teaching because it allows me to smooth out those complicated details."

Page Twiss, professor of geology, said he will continue to work after his retirement.

"I've enjoyed all of it and will continue to do some research," Twiss said. "I've made lots of good friends here and couldn't just leave it. It's not that easy."

▶ STATE ELECTIONS

Costs rise; candidates pay own costs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Campaigns have become much more expensive over the past decade, and candidates for the state House of Representatives are taking more money out of their own pockets and from out-of-state groups.

The amount of money House candidates took from out-of-state groups was almost 21 times greater in 1994 than it was in 1982.

The amount of money contributed by candidates and their spouses more than tripled in the same time period.

However, during the same period, the amount of money candidates raised for state House increased dramatically, from $1.25 million in 1982 to $2.94 million in 1994.

The figures were compiled in a report by the state Commission on Governmental Standards and Conduct, which enforces campaign finance laws.

The commission's staff made the report public Tuesday during the commission's regular monthly meeting.

"The influence of special interest groups has risen dramatically," Carol Williams, the commission's executive director, said.

Contributions from each individual source has increased from 1982 to 1994. However, the commission's report shows the amount of money candidates have taken from out-of-state groups and donated to their own campaigns has increased with each election cycle.

For example, out-of-state organizations donated less than $18,000 to House candidates in 1982, or only 1.4 percent of all the funds they raised.

Farmers need economic solution

TRACEY STINSON
Collegian

This is the third in a six-part series about K-State professors who are working on research projects or have developed inventions to preserve and protect the environment.

In tropical regions around the world, ecology is colliding with economic development.

Dennis Law, professor of landscape architecture, decided to come up with one possible solution to this conflict.

"We need economic incentives to solve environmental problems," Law said.

Law has worked to design a plan that would allow farmers in tropical regions to farm in the existing conditions.

Farmers burn off vegetation to try to grow crops on the floor of the rain forest.

"The soil in the rain forest is not any good. They can farm an area for a couple of years.

Then they have to move onto a new area because the soil has no nutrients left in it," Law said.

Law said the key to solving this problem is providing an economic incentive for farmers.

"The farmers are just trying to feed their families. We need to come up with an economic incentive that could help solve this environmental problem," Law said.

The rain forests are being burned at a rate of 100 acres per minute, according to Law's case study on solving the conflict between the environment and economics.

If there were an alternative way of farming for tropical farmers, there could be harmony between those laws of nature and the law of market economics, Law said.

Law worked on a model of a farming station that would use hydroponics, which is the process of growing crops without soil.

"All the soil does for plants is hold it upright and transport the nutrients the roots need, so I worked on a way to suspend the plant in the air while at the same time supplying the necessary nutrients to its roots," Law said.

EARTH 25th Anniversary DAY

This would allow tropical farmers to farm in the forest without burning the existing foliage.

The farmers would also be able to farm in one place indefinitely instead of moving around always looking for fresh ground to farm on, Law said.

The model consists of several parts. For the model to work, domestic waste in the area would be recycled through trenches and septic tanks. The nutrient-rich water would then be used to raise fish. Law sees the fish as a key element to his model.

"The farmer can raise the fish to sell and feed his family. Then he can also use the fish to provide the nutrients to fertilize the roots of his crops," Law said.

The crops would be grown in stations among the trees. The farmers would be able to reach the trees from scaffolding that would extend from the hillsides to the trees.

Law said he has spent a lot of time on designing the tubes that would be used to suspend the plants in the air.

"They work. I grew tomatoes in my own backyard this way," Law said.

There are a myriad of crops that the area would be suitable to grow. Many spices, herbs and fruits are among the suggestions Law made in his case study.

Law went to Costa Rica to present his paper in 1992.

He said he met much enthusiasm but needs to find financial backing to develop a prototype.

"We need to have it in motion to discover what effects it has on the local vegetation and wildlife. Also, there could be consequences, good and bad, we have not thought of," Law said.

Law said a Costa Rican organization needs to be in charge to get it started.

"The farmers aren't going to trust me. I have no credibility to them," Law said. "It's their country, their crops, their ecology. They will have to make the decisions on their own for this to work properly."

Dynamic bands to rock 'n' roll in Little Apple

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Students threw aside their cowboy hats, moshed, held up their lighters and danced in the aisles last fall for the Live/Weezer concert at Bramlage Coliseum.

Christy Drake, chair of Union Program Council special events, said because of the success of the fall show, UPC was able to bring in Big Head Todd and the Monsters and the Dave Matthews Band for its spring concert at 7:30 p.m. Sunday at Bramlage Coliseum.

"Every successful concert that we put on, we can bring in a little bigger band the next time," Drake said.

Drake said UPC broke even on the Live/Weezer concert, and if it sells 2,400 tickets for the Sunday concert, it might bring in the Cranberries next fall.

"We've sold 1,300 tickets so far, and the sell-out is 3,500, so we still have plenty of tickets," Drake said. "Everyone is amazed that it's not sold out already."

The concert will open with the Boxing Ghandis, followed by double headliners Dave Matthews and Big Head Todd and the Monsters. Tickets are $18 plus service charge and are on sale at all Ticketmaster outlets.

Eileen Meyer, manager of Streetside Records, said she hasn't sold many tickets yet but expects a rush this week.

"A lot of people think the only place to get tickets is Bramlage and the mall. I had front row until 1 p.m. the day they went on sale," Meyer said. "Three or four days prior to the show, they'll probably be all over me."

Meyer said Dave Matthews and Big Head Todd couldn't have come to Manhattan at a better time.

"I honestly believe this council hit this one on the head by moving forward with two groups that have a lot of momentum," Meyer said.

Meyer said integrating a lot of instruments can produce a crowded sound, but bands like Dave Matthews are paving the way for a different style of music.

"In grunge, a lot of instruments are stuffed into one song, and the lyrics and message are intense. This new stuff is very happy, light, and there's an amount of picking going on," Meyer said.

Drake said the college crowd has responded well to light, acoustic music, and when UPC discovered that Big Head Todd was touring in the area, they jumped at the opportunity.

"K-State has voiced a strong opinion that we need more live music. The bars have done a lot to help, but providing music for the campus should be the students' job if there's a campus organization like UPC," Drake said.

Drake said having concerts like Live/Weezer and Big Head Todd/Dave Matthews is beginning to put K-State on the map.

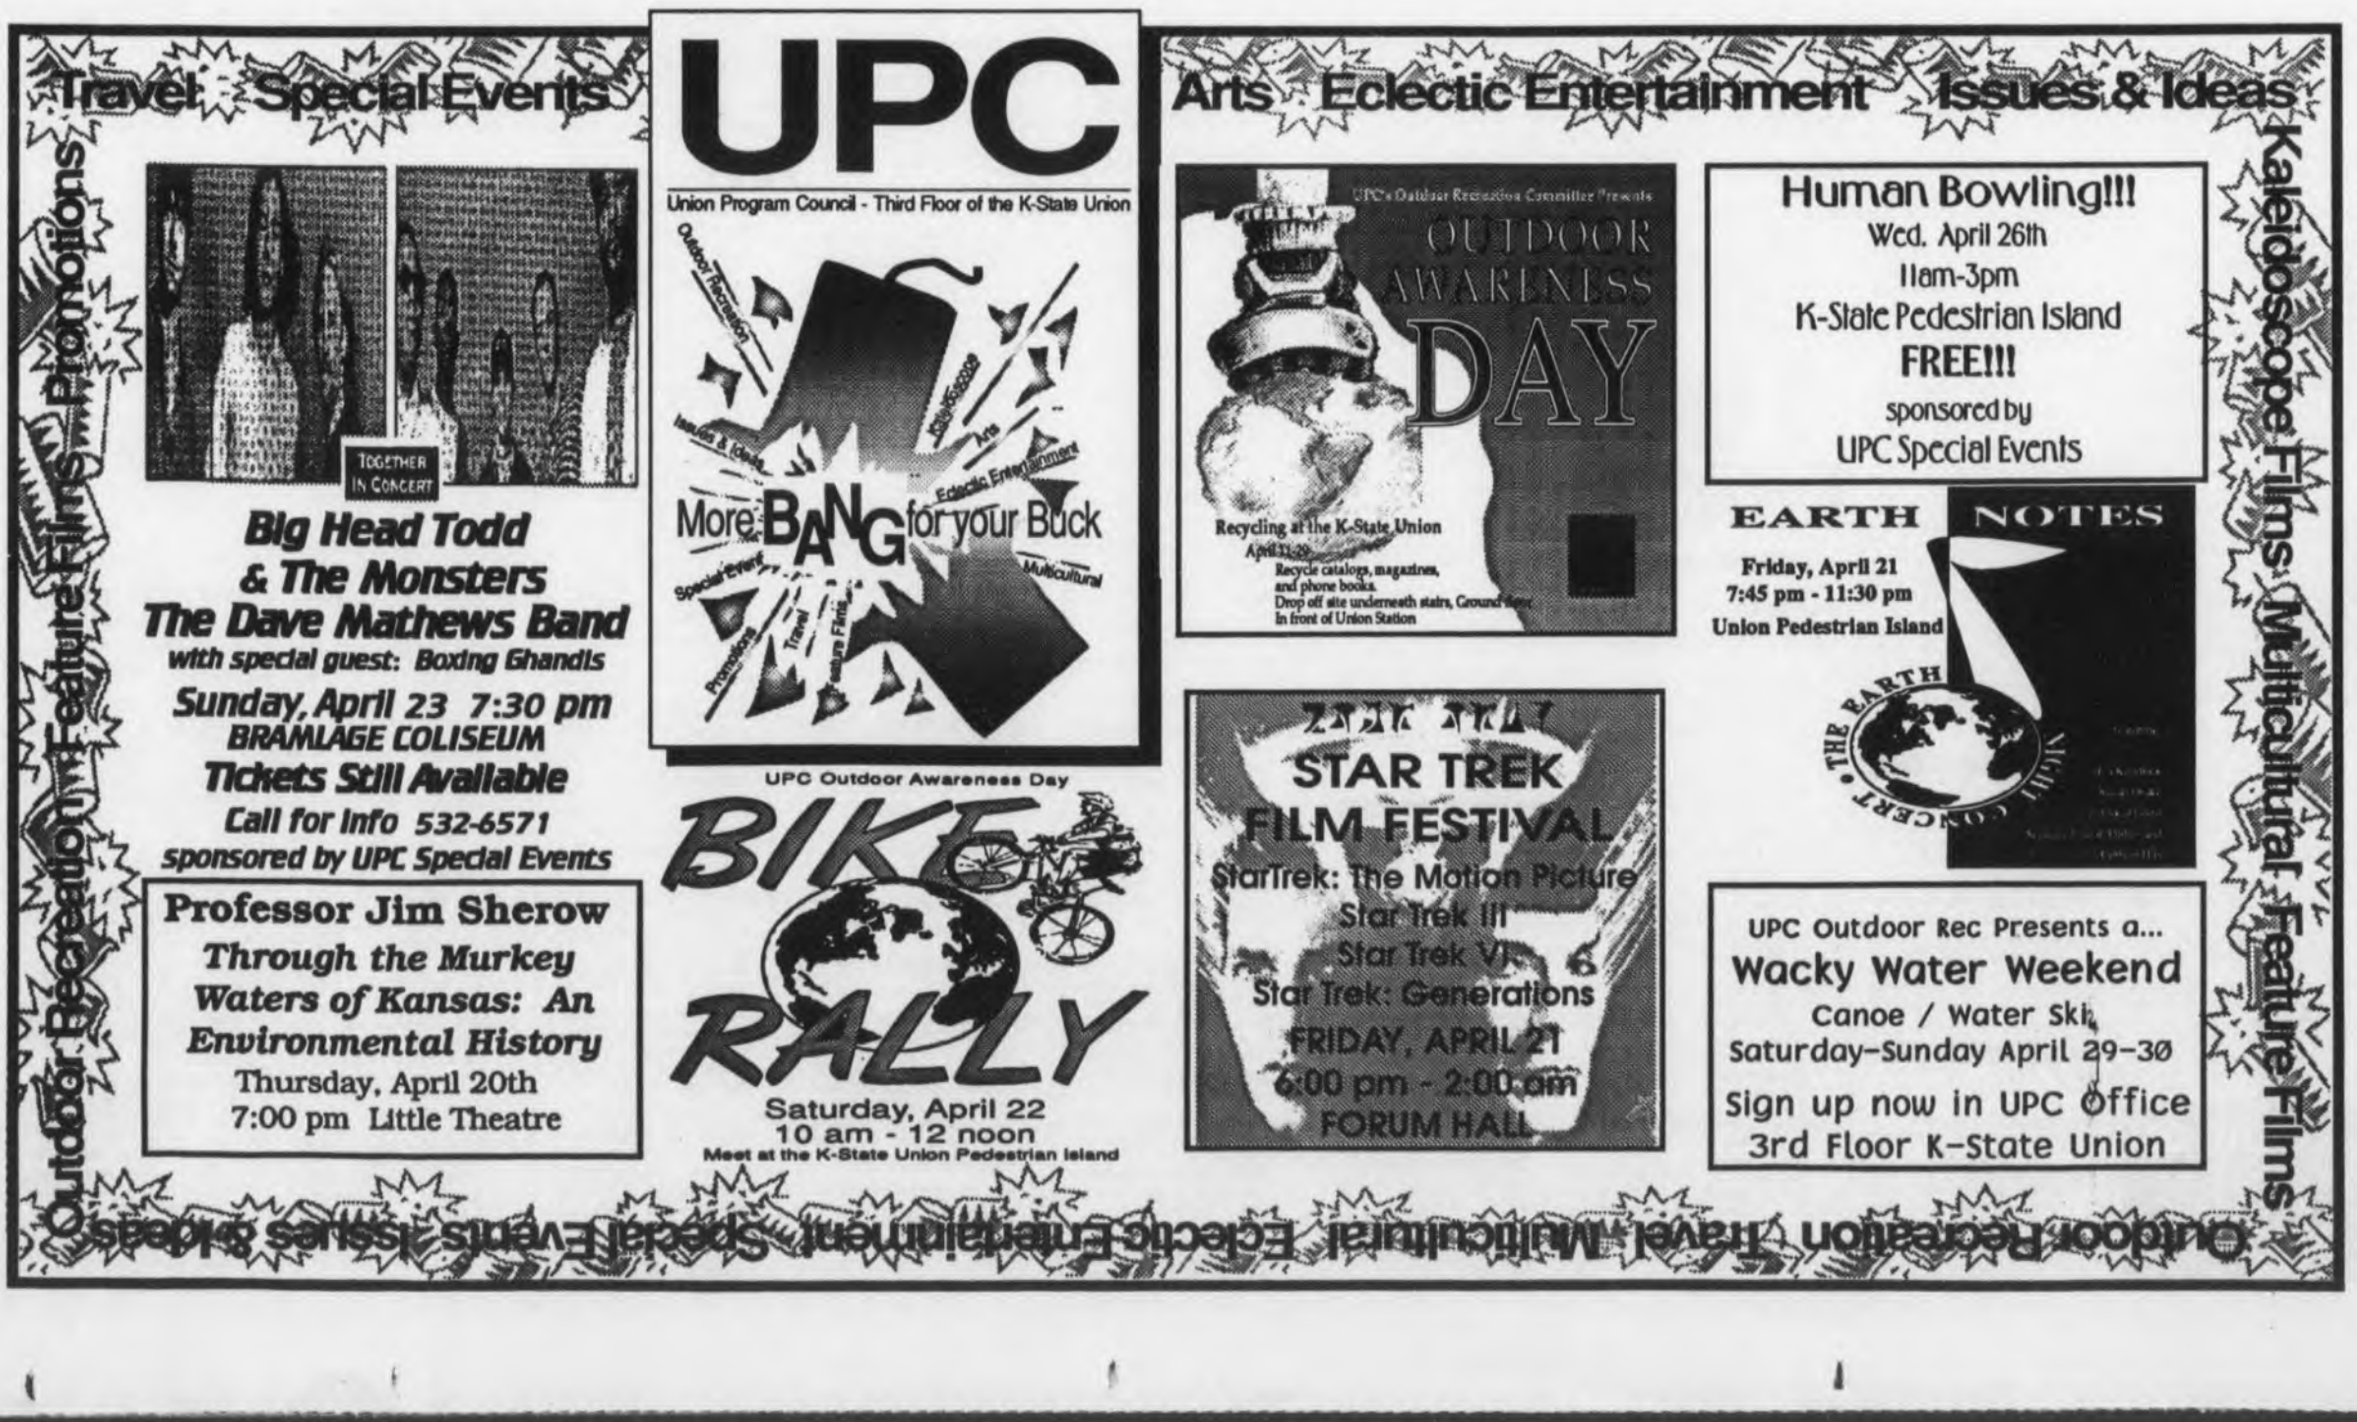
"We have this looming shadow over us that KU does this and that, but we've taken huge steps. This has been an important year for live music," Drake said.

Reader troubled by her erotic dreams

Dear Cassie,

I have had the weirdest dreams lately. They have been very erotic, and normally that wouldn't bother me, but the dreams I have been having have been about other women. Some of the women have even been close friends of mine.

This makes me wonder whether all these years I have been wrong and my real sexuality is emerging.



Signed, Jennie

Dear Jennie,

Just because you have erotic dreams about other women does not necessarily mean you want to act upon them.

Most gay men and lesbians I have talked to said that they knew almost all their lives how they felt, even when they were denying it.

If you feel like these dreams are trying to tell you something, maybe you should talk to a Lafene counselor.

▶ CITY

City manager is dismissed

JILL TEQTMEIER
Collegian

Two people gained city offices while another was dismissed from office on Tuesday.

James Pearson was dismissed from his position as city manager. No specific reason for the dismissal was provided to the public by the commission members.

"After several weeks of serious effort on the part of the city commission, we met with Mr. Pearson this morning. Based on those conversations, I move that the city of Manhattan terminate the contract with the city manager, effective immediately," city commissioner Sydney Carlin said.

The commission did not appoint anyone to assume the city manager title. Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, is performing the duties of the job but without the official title of city manager.

Manhattan also has a new mayor and mayor pro tem.

Edith Stunkel was elected as mayor and Sydney Carlin as mayor pro tem. Both were unanimously elected by the commission.

Stunkel said she is concerned with having good communication lines among the commissioners and also with the public.

She said she will be organizing weekly discussion sessions among commission members to obtain even better communication among them on issues of mutual interest.

Stunkel thanked the commission for electing her as mayor.

"This is an awesome job. I hope that I meet your expectations," she said, nodding to the commission and then to members of the public present at the meeting.

Newly elected commissioners Bruce Snead and Justin Kastner and incumbent Steve Hall were sworn in by the city clerk, and plaques were given in thanks to outgoing Mayor Helen Cooper and outgoing Commissioner Roger Maughmer for their service on the commission.

The commission approved an ordinance amending the city Code of Ordinances to add a provision making it unlawful to park, store, leave or abandon vehicles on private property without authority.

City staff was authorized to enter into an agreement with Manhattan Wrecker Service and Mike's Wrecker Service to perform the necessary towing services.

"If it's on game day and someone parks in your driveway, you can call, and something will be done, at long last," Stunkel said.

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

Incumbent Steve Hall, Justin Kastner, junior in food science and new commissioner Bruce Snead are sworn in at Tuesday evening's Manhattan City Commission meeting.

No user fee for Lafene, 3 years experience keys to Ring

While some programs should be on a user fee, Ring said Lafene is not one of them.

"Lafene is being used, and I don't see how it could continue under a user fee," she said.

She said she bases her opinion on conversations with Lannie Zweimiller, director of student health.

Zweimiller said Lafene gets 76,000 visits from 13,000 students each year. He said the fee system that Lafene operates on is similar to all of the other Big Eight schools.

Zweimiller said under a user-fee system, Lafene would have to charge as much as other health-care providers in the area.

Ring said other local health-care options are expensive.

"As a student right now, I know I couldn't afford office visits," she said.

She said her three years of experience in student government has given her time to establish the contacts that would be useful to the student body president.

"I'd be able to start right away if I was elected student body president. I don't have to spend the first three weeks learning what to do."

She said she wants to make the office of the president accessible.

Peterson's hands-off approach is not appropriate in student government, Ring said.

She said she wants people to feel like she is involved.

She said to do that she will expand the president's cabinet and create listening boards. Presidents of student organizations would be invited to the listening board meetings to get a good cross-section of the student population involved in student government, she said.

Traveling cabinet meetings would create the visibility and accessibility she hopes to have as president, Ring said.

Ring said she will continue to sponsor voter registration drives because she thinks student involvement is important in government.

Ring, who is registered to vote in her home town of Lincoln, Neb., said she believes being registered to vote anywhere is important.

"I don't think it will be a hindrance. I can represent students who are registered to vote here," Ring said.

Jobs rely heavily on environment

"Jobs are absolutely tied to the environment and absolutely depend upon it," Nelson said. "The economy is a wholly owned subsidiary of the environment. If you deplete the environment, the economy will also be depleted."

The Earth relies on the land, air and water. Take these characteristics away from the Earth, and it would be a wasteland, he said.

When experts are asked to list the most critical environmental problems, they are practically unanimous in ranking the consequences of continued exponential population growth at the top of the list, he said.

"At the current pace the nation is on now, the population will be doubled in 2055," he said. "Our population will increase from 260 to 522 million."

If the population does double, this country will need twice as many schools, cars, parking lots, houses, hospitals and prisons, he said.

"The U.S. needs to perceive the long-term implications and ramifications of continued exponential population growth," Nelson said.

Nelson said whatever President Clinton and the future presidents do toward the environment will rank them among presidents like Washington, Lincoln and Franklin Roosevelt.

Students may pay user fee save the students money in the long run because private businesses would pay their own operating costs.

Lafene might fall under the optional user fee.

"Lafene would be no different than any other health-care service," Peterson said.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of student health, said he is concerned about the proposal.

He said he has looked at many student health-care centers in other colleges, but there are none that operate in the way Peterson has proposed.

"It's going to create a reduction of services," he said. He also said Lafene would have to charge rates similar to other clinics in Manhattan.

He said 40 to 60 percent of the 13,000 different students who use Lafene every year do not have insurance, and he said he did not think most students could afford regular health-care prices.

Zweimiller said it was inexpensive for everyone right now, with full-time students paying $70 a semester and part-time students paying $25.

Peterson said he didn't think most students would pay $140 a year for visiting a doctor.

But, Peterson said, the issue is not all about Lafene.

"There's been some misconception about this, but we're not targeting Lafene with this," Peterson said.

He said he stresses that user fees are about fairness.

"Right now, everyone is considered a user whether they use the things or not," he said.

Linear tuition is also an issue of fairness, he said.

"Every student pays for what they get," he said.

He said classes have to be paid for. When the University says students do not have to pay for more hours than a certain number, anybody who takes less hours will be paying for the people who take more.

"Is it fair for students with family or work to pay for the students who take more?" he said. "It's a contradiction to say we're for a linear tuition with a cap. If you're fair, you get what you pay for."

Peterson said the idea of linear fees is not a campaign issue because he is already on the Kansas Board of Regent's Tuition Fee Committee and will remain on the committee until the board decides what will be done. His position on the committee is not tied to his position as student body president.

He said he thinks he has opened doors of communication with many officials in state and local government and in the University's administration.

Collegian editors refute charges

Marlett said he was upset.

"I feel like I've spent a lot of time this semester tip-toeing around situations that would make me, or the paper, seem biased," he said.

Anderson said he took himself out of the debate when these concerns were voiced in a letter Peterson and Finkeldei addressed to him, in which they declined to attend the debate.

"The first thing I did when I found out they had these concerns was withdraw from the debate," Anderson said.

He said he tried to talk with Peterson and Finkeldei about reconsidering their decision Tuesday morning after he received the letter.

Anderson said he wished the concerns would have been addressed earlier so Peterson and Finkeldei would have felt comfortable coming to the debate.

"I saw Jeff, Brad and Mike (Zamrzla) on Monday. They didn't voice any concerns about my involvement when I talked to them," he said.

Seely went to talk to Peterson and Finkeldei about the change in the debate, Anderson said, and spoke with Mike Zamrzla, Peterson's chief of staff.

"Jeff and Brad weren't in the office at 11:30 when Stephen went there. Mike told Stephen that they didn't want to talk about it. He said the letter said it all," he said.

Finkeldei said concerns about bias in the debate were mentioned to Marlett the previous week.

Marlett said Peterson and Zamrzla had asked him on Thursday if they had reason to be concerned about a slanted debate.

Marlett said he told Peterson and Finkeldei they should not be concerned about the debate.

"As journalists, we are often accused of misquoting people. It's ironic to have the tables turned," Marlett said.

Finkeldei said the candidates wanted to keep from expressing too many concerns until they saw details of the debate.

"We had not seen anything in writing and did not want to react on impulse," Finkeldei said.

Seely said he was disappointed to find out Jeff Peterson would not participate in the forum or in another debate on "A Purple Affair" Tuesday night.

"I think it's really, really sad that a debate for the student body presidency could not happen. It was the only debate students had before the election," he said.

Finkeldei said his and Peterson's absence from the debate does not reflect a reluctance to talk about the issues or indifference to student concerns.

"We haven't hidden from a debate before, and we haven't lost our concern for students," he said.

Despite the fact that Peterson and Finkeldei declined the invitation to debate, the forum was opened up so students could ask questions of Ring and Friedrichs.

Rape prevention poster allocation fails after lengthy debate up on the 12th of April will be gone by the 12th of May," he said.

The money would be used for higher-quality printing of the poster, he said.

"We didn't feel an enhancement of the product is an effective use of student funds," Clouse said.

Clouse said the Allocations Committee encouraged the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls to come back in the fall and request funds if a new poster is produced.

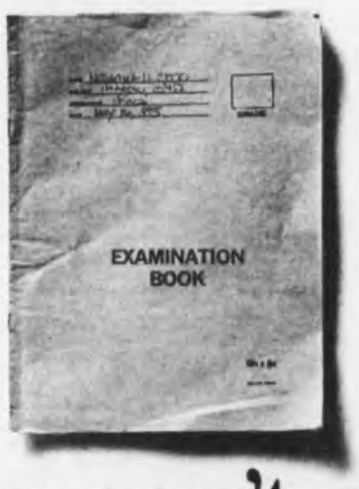
Brent Wiedeman, agriculture senator, said these posters would not be effective because they featured this year's student leaders.

The bill to allocate money to this poster failed 21-26-0.

Senate also considered a bill to loan Meta-'zine, a student publishing group, $150 for magazine production.

Similar arrangements to loan money have been made in the past, Bill Muir, faculty representative, said.

Student Governing Association loans money to the group so they can produce the magazine, Muir said. It will then pay back SGA with the profit.



This allocation will come up for a vote at Thursday's meeting.

Nominations for next year's Senate chair were taken. Michael Henry, Aaron Otto and Jasonomarr Johnson, all arts and sciences senators; John Potter, business senator; and Halinski were nominated. LeDoux was nominated but declined the nomination.

The new chair will be elected at Thursday's meeting.

*Deferred Apple Computer Loan offer expires June 2, 1995. No payment of principal or interest will be required for 90 days. Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to the principal and will bear interest which will be included in the repayment schedule. Monthly payment is an estimate based on a total loan amount of $2,030.69, which includes a sample purchase price of $1,919 and a 6.0% loan origination fee for the Performa 6115 system shown above. The monthly payment for the total loan amount described above would have been $34. The interest is variable based on the commercial paper rate plus 5.35%. For example, the month of February 1995 had an interest rate of 11.57% with an Annual Percentage Rate (APR) of 13.32%. The monthly payment and the APR shown assumes 90-day deferment of principal and interest as described above, and no other deferment of principal and does not include state sales tax. Product prices, product availability, loan amounts and sales taxes may vary. The Apple Computer Loan has an 8-year loan term with no pre-payment penalty and is subject to credit approval. Prequalification expedites the loan process but does not guarantee final loan approval. © 1995 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved.
